PASSING COMMENT

The big thing of the next fortnight—in fact, the very biggest event of the year—will be the National American Music Festival, which convenes at Lockport, N. Y., on September 1 and will continue for seven days.

The programs are wonderful in extent and outreach, and the number of people interested in them is almost beyond belief.

The attendance will, according to Mr. Van De Mark, the very energetic manager, be record-breaking.

Lockport, besides being famous as the home of the American Festival, has many other points of interest.

It is located in a triangle, the other points being Buffalo and Niagara Falls (each only twenty miles distant), and it is also within a short trolley or auto ride from Rochester.

At Lockport are situated the famous Erie Canal Locks, the highest in the world, and the pretty little city is also the very center of the famous Lake Erie fruit belt, where the finest peaches in America are grown.

There is also some beautiful scenery along the "Ridge Road," a little outside Lockport, and there is, further, in the town itself an abundance of old-fashioned and very beautiful hospitality.

Altogether, the trip to Lockport is one well worth taking, and those of us who have been before are always eager to go again.

The Musical Leader, in an editorial last week, lists several of the difficult questions which will have to be decided in reference to the contest of young pianists and violinists, upon the outcome of which will depend appearances with the Orchestra.

The questions listed are important enough, but not comparable in interest to the one big question as to whether the winning artists are to be paid a fee for their appearance with the Orchestra.

The N. F. M. C. tried for some years to carry on a contest in which the only emolument was "prestige" and the "chance of future engagements" in the interested clubs.

The plan proved to be an utter failure, and this year the N. F. M. C. found it well to offer cash prizes.

Needless to say, the results were infinitely better than before. And so it will be with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra contests. The offer of a paid engagement will attract (and properly) unlimited attention and enthusiasm. Any other sort of contest deserves to be turned down by every self-respecting young American artist.

Kathryn Browne, Chicago soprano, now in France (Y. M. C. A. War Entertainment) with Josef Konecny, violinist, writes Music News of some wonderful experiences. The company had the great privilege and thrill of visiting the battlefields of Reims, Soissons, and Chateau Thierry.

Horace Clark, one of the prominent piano teachers of Houston, Tex., will be a visitor at Lockport next week.

Once in a while a song is heard which, like Carrie Jacobs-Bond's "Just A-Wearyin' for You" or James MacDermid's "Sacrament," one feels from the very first will be an unlimited popular success.

Such a song is "Lonesome," by Homer Rodeheaver, which was used as one of the contest numbers at Winona Lake last week, and which, by the time it had been sung by each of the four contestants, had captured every person in the big auditorium, which, incidentally, held one of the largest audiences of the summer at the time.

It is a song of utmost simplicity of style, but has a very beautiful and distinctly "haunting" melody.

The work throughout (including the piano accompaniment) is skillfully done and exceedingly pleasing, and it is very safe to say that it will find its way into the repertoire of a great many singers.

Incidentally, it is to be noted that the high voice arrangement was "made especially for Miss Margaret Owens."

Miss Margaret is the very talented young daughter of H. W. Owens, Chicago vocal teacher, and she it was who made so big a success in "The Creation" at Winona Lake last week.

She has had special training and some routine in musical comedy, having played a New York engagement in "The Better 'Ole," and her friends will be glad to know that she is now in Detroit playing the leading feminine part in "Sunshine," the attractive musical comedy in which Richard Carle is the star.

Mme. Anna Groff Bryant was a Music News visitor last week, en route from New York, where she has spent the past two months, to Galesburg, where she will resume her work as head of the Music Department at Lombard College in September.

Mme. Bryant it is who has done so much to put Galesburg on the musical map.

Always there have been good colleges and good teachers, but until the advent of

LEON ROTHIER AT RAVINIA

For those who have seen and heard Leon Rothier in "The Love of the Three Kings," it is not surprising to read in the Chicago papers of his sweeping success in the role at Ravinia Park.

Henriette Weber says, "Rothier was ideal," while Herman Devries calls the part "Rothier's glittering opportunity, a remarkable performance which literally stopped the opera until the audience had rewarded him after his big solo. One can scarcely write too much of this Rothier triumph."

When one analyzes the success of this great basso one needs must give full credit to a phenomenal voice, to begin with. The range permits Rothier to appear at times as a true baritone. But voice alone does not make an artist. Rothier has supplemented his great gift with diligent study, which deems no detail, histrionic or vocal, too insignificant to be dealt with.

As Rothier himself says, "Of all artistic success, nine-tenths is drudgery, and I have come to accept this drudgery as a beneficent fairy who ultimately rewards her faithful followers."

EMMA ROBERTS TO TOUR SOUTH EXTENSIVELY

Daniel Mayer announces that on account of the number of engagements which have been closed for Emma Roberts, the contralto, in the South she will be busy in that section of the country during November and early December. She will go south immediately after her engagement at the Metropolitan Opera House, Philadelphia, on November 8.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY NOTES

Several years ago the American Conservatory established a South Side Branch School at 1133 East Sixty-third street, in the Woodlawn District, and a North Side Branch at 4611 Kenmore avenue, near Wilson avenue. Both schools were very successful from the beginning, and are largely patronized by the musical public. Crawford Keigwin and Walter Aschenbrenner are Director and Secretary, respectively, of the South Side school, and Olga Kuschler, Alice Anderson and Hilda Brown are managers of the North Side Branch.

The six weeks' summer session of the Public School Music Department closed August 1st, with an unusually large attendance. The classes were under the personal direction of O. E. Robinson, prominently identified with the public schools of Chicago.

The American Conservatory will award twenty free scholarships, to be divided among the Piano, Voice, Violin and Dramatic Departments. Competitive examinations will be held from September 5 to September 9.

During that period the John I. Sears piano scholarship will also be awarded.

At the close of the season of 1918-19 three prizes in the form of yearly scholarships were awarded in the graduating class of the Piano, Voice and Violin Departments. These prizes will again be competed for in the contest of 1920. Also several prizes in the form of public recitals.

Mabel Bischoff, who was recently graduated from the department of Public School Music of the American Conservatory, has just been chosen Supervisor of Music for the schools of Beloit, Wis. Miss Bischoff received her entire training in public school music under the direction of O. E. Robinson, the Director of the Department of Public School Music of the American Conservatory. The position at Beloit is regarded as one of the best positions in Wisconsin.

MR. DE LAMARTER OFFERS PRIZE FOR ORGAN COMPOSITION

A prize of $100 is offered by Eric DeLamarter, organist and director of music, Fourth Presbyterian Church, Chicago, for a sonata for the modern organ. The only conditions are that the composer must be American by birth, that the sonata has not been publicly played before its appearance in the weekly recitals at the Fourth Presbyterian Church, and that its length be not less than twelve minutes and not more than twenty minutes. The judges will be Frederick A. Stock, conductor of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra; Clarence Dickinson, organist and director of music, Brick Presbyterian Church, New York, and Mr. DeLamarter. No manuscripts will be accepted after December 1, 1919. Manuscripts should be sent to Mr. DeLamarter at 126 East Chestnut street, Chicago.

Noe—Emma Noe, soprano, Chicago Opera Company, has spent the Summer in Cincinnati.

THE MACBURNEY STUDIOS

The last of the Summer series of song recitals at the MacBurney Studios took place last Monday evening, when B. Fred Wise, a young tenor with unusually fine voice, sang to a goodly audience and unlimited enthusiasm.

Mr. Wise is of fine personality and has a voice which attracts attention at once, and step by step throughout a recital steadily wins admiration.

His musicianship is clear and exact and his interpretative ability marked.

As usual, Mr. MacBurney had chosen a program which had both novelty and great musical and poetic values to recommend it, and it was presented throughout with intelligence as well as musical beauty and with all of that wealth of contrast and color which Mr. MacBurney always insists upon and which, in the case of Mr. Wise, seems of absolute and beautiful response.

Fine accompaniments were played by Harold B. Simonds.

The program:

If With All Your Hearts	Mendelssohn
Oh, In My Dreams	Liszt
Aria from Manon	Massenet
O Bocca Dolorosa	Sibelia
Serenata Gelata	Buzzi-Peccia
Onaway, Awake, Beloved	Coleridge-Taylor

ETHEL TAMMINGA

Ethel Tamminga, Chicago soprano, who has returned lately from a very successful three months' tour of Canada with the Boston English Opera Company, has been singing for the past two weeks at the Terrace Gardens in Chicago, where her voice has attracted much attention and her work received with enthusiasm.

———♯♯♯———

Langer—Ora Padget-Langer, contralto, after teaching a large summer class, has been touring with her husband through Wisconsin and is now visiting her sisters at their summer home in southern Illinois. Mrs. Langer has eight professional pupils doing Chautauqua work this summer, from whom she has received splendid reports. She will begin her fall classes in voice training at Lyceum Arts Conservatory September 8.

DEARBORN SCHOOL OF LYCEUM ARTS

Music News is in receipt of the new catalog of the Dearborn School of Lyceum Arts.

The thought back of the work in this school is well expressed in the following introduction:

"It is the especial privilege of the smaller and more select school to give to each student the personal attention that is so necessary to a well-rounded education. The Dearborn School of Lyceum Arts specializes in just this. The adaptation of the instruction to the student's individual needs and aims is the feature that has attracted a large and enthusiastic clientele of discriminating young people.

"The quality and standards of the teachers and student body are held to be first and foremost. The aim is the building of musicians and dramatic artists of thoroughly rounded education, with the power and equipment to express themselves as artists, in performance upon the concert stage, lyceum or chautauqua platform, church and opera, or as teachers, to impart knowledge according to psychological principles, and to inspire."

The faculty list is as follows:

Voice—Richard De Young, Lyravine Votaw and Lilian Barr Johnson.
Piano—Albert E. Fox.
Expression—Lena Budd Powers.
Violin—Wally Heymar.
Public school music—Lyravine Votaw.

CHICAGO OPERA ASSOCIATION

The Chicago Opera Association announces that Norman-Bel Geddes will arrange the scenery, properties and costumes of "Boudour," the new ballet by Felix Borowski, the Chicago composer and critic. The music is highly emotional and sensuous and affords many opportunities for colorful effects. Mr. Geddes is therefore planning many new stage effects. The ballet will be one hour in length, and Pavley and Oukrainsky, writers of the book, will appear with their own company and the opera corps de ballet.

Felix Borowski's ballet pantomime has for its subject the sultry passions of the wife of an oriental caliph. Boudour has loved one of her husband's slaves, and, having become tired of him, has bestowed her heart upon the caliph's youngest brother. The tragedy that follows is the result of Boudour's plot to remove her husband and the frenzied jealousy of the slave whose love she has disdained.

Announcement is also made that Mr. Geddes will provide the scenery and costumes for "Jacquerie," the new opera by Gino Marinuzzi, the new principal conductor for next year. As Mr. Geddes is now busy with "La Nave," the new opera by Itala Montemezzi, he will make no less than three productions for the coming season of the Chicago opera.

CLARENCE EDDY IN RECITALS

Clarence Eddy, who will concertize extensively in the Middle West during the fall, will play an organ recital at the Auditorium, Topeka, Kan., on September 8, and will give the opening recital on a new Hilgreen & Lane organ at the Kountze Memorial Church in Omaha on the 12th.

EDITORIAL

Mme. Groff Bryant, a few years ago, there had not been a great many concerts by visiting artists.

This energetic woman, however, decided that she would try her hand at management, for the benefit of Galesburg, and during the past few years she has brought to that city almost all the big International and American artists, and she has gained great fame as a successful manager, even as she has also been known for many years as a splendid vocal teacher.

Her announcements for the coming season are not yet quite ready, but when she does give them out it will be seen at once that she believes in putting into them a constant crescendo of interest and value, and that what she will have to offer this year will be in advance even of the splendid courses she has heretofore given.

Following are more poems by Blanche Blood, Chicago violinist and pedagogue:

THE GOLDEN PAST

I love the house where you were born,
Where you first saw the light of morn,
The spacious yard where you did play,
In innocence the live-long day.
'Twas there you passed those golden hours,
Playing among the scented flowers,
The chamber where you still repose,
And dream, as in those days of yore,
I seem to see your Mother, dear,
Whose guiding hand dispelled all fear.
No Mother ever lived more kind,
More loving, gentle, and refined.
The memory of it long will dwell;
For 'tis the spot I love so well.
There's nothing in this world that cheers
Than memories of those golden years;
They loom like meteors from the sky,
So swiftly do they pass me by;
And then again like clouds of fleece
That float above the waves of peace.
Oh, childhood's days so free from care;
Can anything with them compare?

FEAR NOT

Fear not, the way is clear unto mine eye,
And I will watch o'er thee until the end;
Though sunlight fade, and clouds obscure the sky,
Though others fail, still shall I be thy friend.

Press on, nor waste a moment on the way,
For thou must soon upon the summit shine;
Great then the boons that will thy toil repay,
For there a crown of purest gold is thine!

TO HER

Thy voice, so tender, soft and sweet,
Doth haunt me in my very sleep;
And rest, sweet rest, steals over me
Whene'er my fancies turn to thee.
My waking hours with joys are bright,
With thoughts of thee; celestial light,
And I would gladly die, if I Could thus make peril pass thee by.
Though seasons come and seasons go,
Still deeper doth my true love glow,
And ever will unchanging be;
My tender love, that glows for thee!

CHICAGO OPERA ASSOCIATION

The Chicago Opera Association will have a new stage manager for its 1919-1920 season in the person of Jules Speck. Mr. Speck was stage manager at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York for about eight seasons and is thoroughly familiar with the American methods of producing grand opera. Before coming to this country he was stage director of the Paris Grand Opera House.

A native of France, Jules Speck enjoys a wide reputation as a master of stagecraft. He began his life's work at the Municipal Opera House of Bordeaux, going from there to Marseilles, Lyons, Algiers, and finally to the Theatre Lyrique de la Renaissance of Paris. It was while at the latter house that he made the acquaintance of Pedro Gaillard, the famous French baritone, equally famous as the director of the Paris Grand Opera. Gaillard was deeply impressed with the work of Speck and induced him to come as stage director of France's foremost operatic institution. Mr. Speck remained at the Paris Grand Opera for several years, but, yielding at last to the lure of the New World, he consented to come to the Metropolitan Opera House of New York. At the outbreak of the world war, feeling that his place was in France during all the time France was in danger, he resigned his post and returned to his native land. Since the fall of 1914 he has acted as director of the Municipal Opera House at Nice, and he was on the point of accepting a flattering offer to come to Strassburg when Maestro Campanini persuaded him to accept the stage direction of the Chicago Opera Association.

IVA BIGELOW WEAVER

Iva Bigelow Weaver, of whom a new picture is shown on another page of this issue of Music News, has been spending the summer in the Catskill Mountains, where she has been coaching in a musical colony.

Mrs. Weaver lost much of the time of the past two years through a long illness, but, happily, she is now entirely recovered, and expects during the coming season to teach a large class in both Milwaukee and Chicago and also to re-enter the church and concert fields.

Mrs. Weaver is the possessor of a beautiful voice in which ease and brilliance of execution is an equal factor with charm of tonal quality and richness of effect.

She has sung in many large churches and has always made splendid successes in that line of work.

In concert she has few equals, as her voice is powerful as well as flexible and brilliant, and her repertoire is practically limitless.

Her return to the concert field will be a distinct gain to both of the cities in which she will work and the greatest of success may confidently be predicted for her.

As a teacher she stands with few equals and has to her credit some of the best young artists of both Chicago and Milwaukee.

LILLIAN WIESIKE

Lillian Wiesike came to America during the season 1913-14, just previous to the beginning of the war, after the period of study and singing and making a name for herself among concert and oratorio singers in Europe. She made a short but most successful concert tour through her own country and intended to return the following season, when the outbreak of the world war prevented her coming. She managed, however, to come home just at the time when this country entered the war, and she has remained here ever since, living in her old home in the Middle West.

The coming season will find her again among the available singers in the concert field, and her reappearance will undoubtedly be welcomed by many people who admired her art and beautiful quality of her voice and her simplicity and charming manner. Lillian Wiesike can only devote part of her time to concert singing, as she is associated with two music colleges in the Middle West, where she has a large class of vocal students.

Her forthcoming concert tour will again be under the management of Miss Annie Friedberg, who introduced Miss Wiesike six years ago to the music lovers of her own country.

EXTRACT OF LETTER RECEIVED BY MR. VANDERPOOL

"Your song 'Values' is much appreciated by me, and I am using the same often. Have given it to many pupils, and find it gives general satisfaction. A good short song, as this one is, is so very useful on so many occasions. I like it especially for tenor. Send along some more. I have all kinds of voices—high and low—and can use more and do use so many songs every day."

DEATH OF RUDOLPH SCHIRMER

Rudolph E. Schirmer, president of G. Schirmer, Inc., the music publishers, was born at New York on July 22, 1859. He was educated in private schools at New York and Weimar, Germany. He graduated with the degree of B. A. from Princeton University in 1880, and as LL. B. from the Columbia Law School in 1884, being admitted to the New York bar in the same year.

Equipped with this knowledge of legal matters, he entered the firm of music publishers founded by his father in 1866, whom he, together with his brother, Gustave, ably assisted in giving to the firm its character and standing. Upon the reorganization of the firm as a stock company in 1893, Rudolph Schirmer became the president of the corporation and continued to hold this position until his death.

The sudden death of his equally capable and cultured brother, Gustave, in 1907 cast a great additional burden of responsibility on Rudolph Schirmer's shoulders, and the strain thus imposed on him gradually undermined his health. His ceaseless activity in developing the firm by leaps and bounds to its present eminence in the music publishing industry culminated in the erection of the G. Schirmer music publishing factory in 1914 on Long Island, the largest and most modern establishment of its kind in America. During the last few years Mr. Schirmer's delicate health compelled him to spend most of the year at his home in Santa Barbara, Calif.

While retaining until the end a directing and advisory influence on the business of the firm, he gradually withdrew from the actual active management in favor of his nephew, Gustave Schirmer.

Rudolph E. Schirmer was characteristically a publisher of the type that sees in a publisher a trustee of the best interests of the art and believes that it is a publisher's duty to give to the public not only what it wants, but what it needs. In matters of real art he did not hesitate to subordinate commercial considerations to the higher cultural aspects of an enterprise. Of this attitude, the Musical Quarterly, founded by him in 1915, is a typical example. Once his love of the beautiful, his exquisite taste and his discriminating esthetic judgment convinced him of the lasting merits of a new composer, he would spare no reasonable expense in making his access to the public easier. Thus the careers of such composers as Charles Martin Loeffler, John Alden Carpenter, Charles T. Griffes, Bryceson Treharne, Kurt Schindler, Ernest Bloch, Percy Grainger, Rudolf Friml, Enrique Granados, John Powell, Daniel Gregory Mason, Henry Hadley, David Stanley Smith, and Rubin Goldmark have become indissolubly connected with his own in American musical history. Such names incidentally prove his keen and sincere interest in the rising generation of American composers, and it is worthy of note that many years before the discussion of the prospects of the American composers became controversial, Rudolph Schirmer was seeking ways and means for a practical furtherance of their art. His interests extended to institutions, and in keeping with his ideals, he donated the Circulating Library of Music, founded by G. Schirmer, to the Institute of Musical Art, New York, and a select musical library to Santa Barbara, in memory of his infant daughter, who died in 1918.

It is a pity that Mr. Schirmer could never be persuaded to write down his reminiscenses, for they extended for more than fifty years back to the time when he as a boy knew Franz Liszt at Weimar. The circle of his acquaintances and friendships with artists, great and small, was very wide, and he was known both here and in Europe for his princely hospitality to celebrities who visited our shores. His love of the beautiful was not confined to music. It embraced the other arts as well, and especially his collection of Chinese porcelains and Japanese lacquers is appreciated among connoisseurs for its intrinsic value.

Mr. Schirmer was a member of the University, Racquet and Tennis, and Princeton University clubs of New York, the Metropolitan Museum of Art, the Horticultural Society, the National Institute of Social Sciences, the American Museum of Natural History, the New York Academy of Sciences, etc. He was a trustee of the Institute of Musical Art and a director of the Oratorio Society and the New York Symphony Society.

Music at RAVINIA PARK

L'Oracolo

Certainly the management of Ravinia should have felt gratified on last Friday evening, and Mr. Scotti of the Metropolitan Opera Company highly flattered, at the enormous attendance at this time to hear the New York baritone in his especial creation, "L'Oracolo."

It was the third time for the season, and yet the audience was of such size as to completely fill the big pavilion and to provide thousands of people for the benches under the trees, to say nothing of the army of standees all about the park.

The reason for all this interest cannot be found in the Scotti singing, although that is pleasurable, too, but altogether, I think, because of his vivid portraiture of the opium den keeper, Chim-Fang, in the brilliant opera by Leoni.

A second hearing of the work allowed more careful concentration of attention on the music itself, and this was found to be so colorful as to be in a class almost alone and so logical and well proportioned as to argue eloquently the fact that it is good music and such as will stand the strain of a time analysis.

The Chicago Orchestra did wonders with this picturesque (at times bizarre) score and added mightily to its own laurels as well as to those of the conductor, Gennaro Papi.

Mr. Scotti has made a most remarkable study of his part and he plays it with such telling effect as to give one the impression—almost—of listening to a play rather than to an opera.

In this wonder of interpretative detail he is ably seconded by Florence Easton and Leon Rothier, who not only disclose singing voices of splendor but who in histrionic detail are just as fine and effective as is Mr. Scotti, although neither of their roles occupies the stage so continuously as does his.

Louis D'Angelo was again found gratifyingly effective in his part, and the small roles played by Miss Ingman and Mr. Derman were well taken care of, while Orville Harrold in his singing again proved a joy, although his appearance and dress in this opera certainly need some revision.

After the intermission an act of "Madame Butterfly" was given, and here the team work of Miss Easton and Alice Gentle was again shown to that splendid advantage which always attaches to it and which at this time brought them a genuine ovation.

After both operas, in fact, the applause was at a point of frenzied eloquence rarely in evidence at Ravinia, and not only Mr. Scotti but also all members of the cast had to respond an endless number of times.

The child used in this performance was absolutely fine—tiny and cunning and beautifully trained.

OLGA CARRARA RE-ENGAGED AT THE STADIUM

No distinguished artist has received such a tribute from the management of the Stadium concerts as that bestowed upon Mme. Olga Carrara.

Two brilliant appearances in "Aida," on August 5 and August 15, have established the reputation of this superb soprano, and recognition of her achievements is attested by two re-engagements, one for August 27, when the Italian soprano will sing excerpts from "Trovatore," in which naturally Mme. Carrara will render the principal part of Leonora. On September 1, Labor Day, Mme. Carrara will have the honor of closing the season at the Stadium in a performance of "Cavalleria," when she is expected to interpret the part of Santuzza.

Both performances will be given in concert form. Judging by her previous achievements in "Aida," one may expect a repetition of the previous successes.

The Christian Science Monitor of Boston, under date of August 9, had the following to say concerning her singing in "Aida":

"The night brought forward a soprano, Mme. Olga Carrara, who gave promise of winning important recognition by and by as a dramatic singer. She has a rich, powerful and expressive voice which she uses as one who is well schooled."

NEW HAVEN, CONN.

Before an audience that completely filled the square surrounding the bandstand, Mana-Zucca, the gifted American singer-composer, sang in a superb voice two of her successful songs, "If Flowers Could Speak" and "Spring Came With You." The latter has only recently been published by the Boston Music Company, and it ought to become as great a favorite with singers as "If Flowers Could Speak." Miss Zucca was accompanied by the Municipal Band on Sunday afternoon, under the efficient leadership of Max Dessauer.

The complete program, given on the New Haven Green, was:

The Star Spangled Banner.....Key
March—113th Field Artillery (Dedicated to the 30th Division).....Arthur Troostwyk
Overture Bohemian Girl.....Balfe
Waltz—Princess Pat.....Herbert
Hungarian Fantasy.....Tobani
Introduction to Third Act and Bridal Chorus from Lohengrin.....Wagner

Miss Mana-Zucca, Soprano
Angelus and Polonaise (Scenes Picturesque)..Massenet

Overture 1812.....Tschaikowski

The concert served to introduce Mana-Zucca to the New Haven public, and a most brilliant and highly successful introduction it was! For an extra, Miss Zucca sang "Spring Came With You." The composer was recalled numerous times.

JAMES WATTS AN OPERA STAR MIMIC

The following comment on the unique work of James Watts is taken from the New York Morning Telegram:

"James Watts, whose grotesque impersonations of opera singers and Russian ballet dancers are causing much merriment at the Greenwich Village Theater, has had a rather remarkable career. Watts started out to be a grand opera singer, and at the conservatory at Melbourne, Australia, where he attended a school of dancing and studied operatic roles with Mme. Emma Nevada, it was said that Watts displayed every qualification essential to success. He possessed a remarkable tenor voice and showed signs of unusual dramatic ability, but his sense of drollery often led him away from his serious endeavors, and his extremely funny imitations of the pupils at the Melbourne Conservatory led ultimately to his success as a satirist in musical comedy and in vaudeville.

Mme. Nevada was fond of giving entertainments for her London friends and at these impromptu affairs Watts often gave humorous impersonations of the male and female performers. At one of these recitals he happened to attract the attention of Dr. Palmer, Mme. Nevada's husband, who advised him to discontinue his studies and do in public just what he had been doing at these informal entertainments from time to time.

Accordingly Watts made his next appearance in "Hello, Ragtime" at the London Coliseum, where he afterward played in many well-known musical comedies. His work in "The Greenwich Village Follies," where he indulges in travesty in makeup, talk, song and dance, proves him to be an original artist and a comedian with a rare sense of humor and of burlesque."

ARTHUR KRAFT

Arthur Kraft, tenor, who is nearing an end to his study in New York, is looking forward to a busy Winter. Mr. Kraft has booked many oratorio engagements, the last being "Elijah," to be given by the A Capella Chorus of Milwaukee. Mr. Kraft's voice is well suited to oratorio work, and he was fortunate indeed in having the opportunity to work with a man like Dr. Charles E. Allum.

Mr. Kraft has also been engaged to give a program before the Birchwood Musical Club early in January. On September 1 Mr. Kraft will sing at St. Bartholomew's Church in New York, and on Friday, the 29th, sings several groups of songs at a studio recital of Frank La Forge, with whom Mr. Kraft is coaching. August 7 Mr. Kraft sang on a program where Harriet Ware was the guest of honor. The papers say "Arthur Kraft made a profound impression by his artistic rendition of a group of songs, including Seneca Pierce's 'My Little House.' Mr. Pierce was in the audience and was obliged to acknowledge the applause with Mr. Kraft."

ALICE PHILLIPS, PUPIL OF WILLIAM PHILLIPS, SUCCEEDS IN DIFFICULT ROLE

Called upon in an emergency, Alice Phillips, dramatic soprano, learned a role in five days and sang it twice with the greatest success. The role was that of Queen Esther in William Dodd Chenery's community opera, "Deliverance," given at the Quiver Lake Chautauqua, Havana, Ill., on August 15 and 17. The Peoria Journal, in commenting upon the work of Mrs. Phillips, said:

"Worthy consort of this mighty ruler was his lovely Queen Esther as visualized by Alice Phillips. The richness of her brilliant dramatic soprano voice and her ease and grace of bearing united to make a most delightful portrayal."

William Phillips, baritone, teaches at 1625 Kimball Hall in the Cosmopolitan School of Music.

Herbert Gould was conductor of the community sing at Quiver Lake Chautauqua and sang the role of King in the cantata with fine effect.

AT THE OLYMPIC THEATER

With its usual good luck—possibly one should say, its good judgment—the Olympic found itself, last week, the only downtown theater exempt from the "strike" edict and consequently there were packed houses to witness the performance of "Down Limerick Way!" by Fiske O'Hara and his excellently chosen company.

Though, very likely, the same pleasant condition of "sold out" night after night would obtain anyway, for, as you know, Mr. O'Hara is extremely popular, and also, as you quite likely do not know as yet, his new play is distinctly the best he has yet had.

Anna Nichols wrote this play, and she certainly knew how to compound a pleasing and colorful as well as properly contrasted list of characters and situations.

There is the kind-hearted but big, and a little bit timid, Sir Daniel (played by Mr. O'Hara); his fine old Irish mother, not ashamed of her plebeian parentage; his aristocratic (and useless) uncle, his foolish young brother Paul, and his impossibly "cultured" sister and her friend, who has designs upon Sir Daniel's heart and fortune.

And, then, there is the lovely, red-headed, quick-tongued and altogether adorable colleen, Ellen O'Glorian, who is "bequeathed" to Sir Daniel by her dying father (his life-long friend), and who, by her breezy, honest ways, annoys the aristocratic part of the family very much, but who creeps into the hearts of the old mother and the young Sir Daniel, and who finally becomes the bride of the latter in spite of quite a few little impediments set in her way by the jealous sister.

It is all very pretty and very nice, and, also, the diction of Miss Nichols bristles with wit, fancy and Irish love and patriotism, and it is all uttered by Daniel and Ellen and the mother, to say nothing of an old soothsayer and the (finally) repentant Paul with great gusto and constant response from the audience.

Mr. O'Hara, as you will remember, is noted for his high, clear tenor voice, and this he uses to immense advantage in several songs during the evening, but only one of these, "Down Limerick Way," is in the least worthy of attention, and this one simply on account of its lovely melody and not at all because it is a skillful piece of composition.

With such a voice as that of Mr. O'Hara and with such evidently good method and knowledge of singing, he ought—once—to get a real music composer to write a set of songs for one of his charming plays, and the result would certainly be worth a lot of trouble and money.

The orchestra at the Olympic is a really good one and, besides playing some very good music between the acts, it proved itself alert and artistic in entr acte music and in accompaniments.

The play, "Down Limerick Way," is very beautifully put on the stage, excellently managed, and from the star down it is splendidly played. Patricia Clary is delightful as Ellen and Laurette Allen is perfect as the mother—Lady Daragh. C. E. W.

NEW CONSERVATORY AT NEW ORLEANS

The New Orleans Conservatory of Music will open September 22, according to an announcement Saturday by Ernest E. Schuyten, director of the new school. Mr. Schuyten stated that registration would begin September 15.

"Foremost in our vocations, in our industries, it should follow that music must take a place of foremost importance in the education of the present and the next generation," said Miss Mary Conway, who is taking an active interest in the new school. "Musical instruction must be so organized and presented as to provide for the vocational interests of the many as well as for vocational training in music of the talented few. The curricula must be planned to develop the physical, intellectual and spiritual side of the individual."

Mr. Schuyten says the newly organized conservatory will do for the pupils what Miss Conway suggests. Instructors in piano, voice, organ, violin and other orchestral instruments will be given by such teachers as Corinne Mayer, Mary Scott, Mary Malony, Jane Austin Tuttle, Mark Kaiser, Ethel McGehee, Jane Foedor and Parvin Titus, as well as instruction in composition, harmony, history of music, theory, solfeggio, diction, choir training and ensemble.

THE WORLD'S GREATEST MUSIC FESTIVAL

The world's greatest music festival, held at Lockport, N. Y., the first week of September, has announced its programs. A glance over the list of attractions will suffice to show the importance of the artistic doings to take place there and the thorough Americanism of the undertaking.

The event will be stupendous in its outreach and influence. Not only will the leading American artists be present, but also many young ones who need this encouragement. There is an endless list of singers, pianists and violinists who will appear in recitals of American compositions, and there is an interesting list of speakers to be heard.

The object of the festival is to promote the cause of native artists, composers and music. From a very small beginning it has grown to be recognized as the greatest musical event held in this country.

Little Lockport, with its true, old-fashioned hospitality and its beautiful hillside situation sloping to the shores of Lake Ontario, not far from Niagara Falls, is a cordial host of this festival, which is not conducted for profit, but purely for patriotism and Americanism in music. The local business men and householders make personal sacrifices to accommodate the pilgrims (many of whom journey from the farthest points of the country to this musical mecca), mainly because they hold virtue to be its own reward.

The local hotels are not sufficient, so the finest homes are opened to the guests of the festival. The association maintains an Artists' Dining Room.

The morning sessions are given over to round table talks on voice, piano, composition, lectures, discussions and recitals by young artists. The main concerts are held during the afternoons and evenings.

Among the many great American artists and attractions appearing at the National American Festival this year we find such well-known names as Carrie Jacobs-Bond, Florence Macbeth, Arthur Middleton, Frederica Gerhardt Downing, Oliver Denton, Lila Robeson, Mme. Sturkow-Ryder, Frederick Gunster, Melvena Passmore, Marie Sundelius, Charles W. Clark, Wynne Pyle, Cecil Burleigh, Arthur Hartmann, Oscar Seagle, Lucille Stevenson, Edna Gunnar Peterson, Blanche Da Costa, John Powell, Kathleen Howard, Orville Harrold, Edna De Lima, Maria Conde, Gaylord Yost, Rosa Hamilton, Olive Nevin, Edith Crill Wild, Mme. Marie Zendt, Mable Corlew Smith, Harvey Hindermyer, Dr. Carver Williams, Earle Tuckerman, Vera Kaighm, Harriet Case, Cleveland Bohnet, Pittsburg Artists' Trio, Rubinstein Chorus, Kathryn Maisle, Marguerite Ringo, and a score or more equally well known.

The fate of all such estimable adventures in art invariably hinges upon that beloved, impersonal and ineluctable agency which we call the public. The National American Music Festival has the approval of the public in general. It is a great altruistic movement, run without profit or gain, and is declared an educational institution by the United States Government.

A. A. Van De Mark, Box 216, Lockport, N. Y., is director.

DANIEL MAYER RETURNING ON THE MAURETANIA

Daniel Mayer, the New York concert manager, has advised Edward W. Lowrey, who has been representing him during his absence abroad, that he would sail for New York on the Mauretania on August 23 and should be due on this side about the 30th. Mr. Mayer reports splendid success in securing English engagements for some of the artists who are under his direction in America. He has also made arrangements for the reopening of his London office on the same extensive scale as before the war.

KNOX CONSERVATORY

One of the standard music educational institutions of the Middle West is Knox Conservatory of Galesburg, Ill., which enjoys fine attendance and extraordinary prestige.

The conservatory has been for years under the direction of William F. Bentley, one of the most distinguished musicians of the country.

Bessie L. Hinckley has been the popular secretary since 1914.

Announcement

The following comment is taken from the most recent catalog, a handsome booklet now being sent out all over the Middle West:

WILLIAM F. BENTLEY

Knox Conservatory of Music was established in 1883, and has since deservedly won the reputation of being a thoroughly first-class school of music. It is essentially a school of musical learning. The course of study has been improved from time to time, until now every facility is afforded the student for a thorough education in all the branches of the curriculum.

The members of the faculty are specialists in their several departments, and, having had exceptional opportunities for study, all have gained a record of successful experience in their teaching. The aim of the school is to enable the student to pursue the study of music under such influences as will develop him not only musically, but also mentally and morally. Being so intimately associated with the faculty and students of the college, the conservatory is bound to absorb much of the college spirit, and this stimulates, broadens, and strengthens the work done in his special department.

The home of the conservatory is in Whiting Hall, where ample practice rooms and commodious studios are provided. The recital hall in Beecher Chapel is supplied with two grand pianos and a three manual pipe organ.

All grades of instruction are given, from the very beginning to the most advanced ideas in interpretation.

Faculty

The complete faculty list is as follows:

William F. Bentley, Mus. B., Mus. D.—Director and professor of singing.

John Winter Thompson, Mus. B., Mus. D.—Professor of pipe organ, theory, and ear training.

Blanche M. Boult, Mus. B.—Professor of pianoforte.

Helen Hanna Birch—Professor of pianoforte.

CHILDREN'S EVENING AT MUNICIPAL PIER

At the Municipal Pier on Friday evening, August 22, under the efficient direction of Miss Bertha L. Iles, was given one of the most successful entertainments by children that this writer has seen in many moons. But, more than successful, it was refreshing, wholesome and delightful to a degree. Nothing could have been planned with more taste or a better insight into the features that go into the making of a good children's program.

One of the most interesting and wholly charming numbers was given by the Children's Hour Orchestra, directed by Marie A. Sexton. One naturally does not expect perfection in such an organization, but anyone listening to this little orchestra on Friday could not but have been gratefully surprised, for the children played with an ease and finish which was wholly unexpected. The Children's Chorus, too, did lovely work, and the scenic effects in connection with their songs were most tastefully planned and carried out.

The dances which were given by children's groups from Stanford Park showed what can be done with costuming in an economic way. The dances, which were arranged and drilled by Hilda Kuchman, gymnasium director of Stanford Park, were most original and graceful and proved beyond a doubt that just as effective plans can be worked out without going to enormous expense.

The Nature Festival which was given by Junior Drama League players, from an arrangement by Cora Mel Patton and Elma Ehrlich-Levinger, was sheer delight in its refinement and grace. The costumes were dainty and expressive and the little dancers were trained and in the proper fanciful spirit to infuse the play with all its figurative interpretation.

Miss Iles is to be congratulated upon her successful leadership.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

MABLE CORLEW SMITH TO GO TO NEW YORK

Chicago musical circles regret exceedingly the departure of Mable Corlew Smith, soprano, for New York, where, however, she is assured a splendid position, as she already has one of the finest church positions and also a well-developed class of pupils as well as a long list of concert engagements.

Mrs. Smith has been the soprano soloist at the First Presbyterian Church of Oak Park for a number of years, and besides drawing one of the largest salaries paid any singer in Chicago or vicinity, has also been in constant receipt of the most enthusiastic endorsement.

She has sung with almost all the musical organizations of Chicago and has filled many other engagements in this part of the country.

She will be very much missed here, but her numerous friends wish her unbounded prosperity in her new home, and they are sure, too, that she will have it.

She leaves on Sunday for Lockport, N. Y., where she will sing next week, proceeding thence to New York City.

WHAT IS CIRCULATION?

CIRCULATION statements are sometimes deceiving, because while they show quantity they cannot reveal quality.

The value of any publication to the advertiser depends very largely upon the reasons which prompt people to subscribe to it. The only subscription reason that can interest the advertiser is genuine demand. And demand, for a trade publication as for any other, is the result of interest in the things published in its pages.

Prof. and Mrs. H. D. Nasmyth gave their lecture-recital on "Songs of the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries" last evening before an enthusiastic audience which filled the university auditorium.

Mr. Nasmyth gave explanatory remarks and stories concerning the lives of the composers before singing the songs composed by them.

The program opened with the beautiful "Caro mio ben," by Giordani, and sung in Italian, the only song on the program, however, which was not sung in English. A sacred song by Bach was the second number and displayed the dignity so noticeable in all Bach compositions.

By way of contrast Mr. Nasmyth gave next a little song composed by the Frenchman, Machault, about the beginning of the fourteenth century—1325; Handel's "Where'er You Walk," from his opera, "Semele," showed Mr. Nasmyth's splendid vocal technic to good advantage, but this was even more evident in the most wonderful of early Italian songs, "Vittoria, Vittoria," by Carissimi. This number brought a storm of applause, and Mr. Nasmyth was forced to repeat the last verse. An interesting incident was related here, that just a year ago this summer Mr. and Mrs. Nasmyth gave this number, with others, before the Duke and Duchess of Devonshire at Toronto, Canada, when he was highly complimented upon his rendition of this classic.

Mr. Nasmyth then led his audience through beautiful compositions by Salvator Rosa, Pergolese, Mozart, Haydn and Beethoven—then introducing an interesting group of old English songs, including Purcell's "Passing By," "Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes" and "Have You Seen but a Whyte Lilye Grow?" These numbers met with the instant approval of the audience and had to be repeated. A high clear mezzo-voce was introduced in both numbers and it was surely a joy to hear. The program concluded with a modern American song, "Until," by Sanderson, which was encored and repeated.

Mrs. Nasmyth gave admirable support at the piano at all times and shared fully in the honors of the evening. While in Europe Mrs. Nasmyth made the art of accompanying her specialty, and this is the first time the Laramie public has had an opportunity to hear her in a regular program.

The program:

Caro mio ben	Giordani (1744-1798)
Forget Me Not	Bach (1685-1750)
Douce dame jolie (Sweetheart Gentle and Pretty)	Machault (1295-1377)

Brown—Owen W. Brown of Oak Park has accepted the position of organist at the River Forest Presbyterian Church. He will assume his duties September 1.

OSCAR SAENGER

Mr. Saenger finished a very strenuous season at the Chicago Musical College, where he was "guest teacher" for five weeks, from June 30 to August 2, working from 8:30 in the morning until 7 at night, until he was obliged to refuse to accept any more pupils. During this short session at the college he gave 500 half-hour lessons, ten hours' repertoire class lessons with an average attendance of twenty-three pupils at each class, and eight hours for voice examination. Mr. Saenger had the assistance of two excellent coaches, who prepared the students for their work with him, and they were kept busy from morning until night—Miss Emily Miller, who has been Mr. Saenger's assistant for many years at his New York studio, and Mr. Gordon Campbell, the well-known pianist of Chicago. Mr. Saenger offered a scholarship during his term at the college, and there were forty-two contestants for the much-coveted honor. The prize was won by Mrs. Ruth Benkirt Wunchel of Des Moines, Iowa. Mr. Saenger is very enthusiastic about his work in Chicago, and found many excellent voices there. He left for the Canadian woods, where he will seek rest and recreation and return to resume teaching at his New York studio on October 1. All communications may be addressed to his secretary, Miss L. Lilly, 6 East Eighty-first street, New York City.

KATHRYN LEE AT WILLOW GROVE PARK

One hundred thousand people heard Kathryn Lee sing in the two weeks she spent at Willow Grove Park in spite of eight days of almost continuous rain, when the concerts took place just the same, and a surprising number of courageous music lovers braved the elements to enjoy the programs, which ranged from grand opera to the more popular ballads of the hour and the time-honored heart-songs of all ages.

"It got to be a very usual thing," said Miss Lee's manager, Mr. Raoul Biais, "to see a large number of regular patrons of the concerts standing along the side and in back, under umbrellas, in the pouring rain, to hear Miss Lee's numbers and vigorously encoring same." The largest crowds are generally on Saturdays and Sundays, and on the last Saturday of Miss Lee's stay the audience numbered 18,000, and the young singer's success was a marvelous tribute to one who, two short weeks before, was literally unknown in that vicinity.

Chicago Opera—The Chicago Opera Association announces the engagement of Hermann Jadlowker, eminent Russian tenor, whose repertoire is both Italian and French. He will appear mostly in the French roles formerly sung by Muratore, and his first appearance will be with Mary Garden. Maestro Campanini is to be heartily congratulated on this last addition to his forces. Never in the history of grand opera, in this country or any other, has there ever been a quintet of such great tenors as Bonci, Dolci, Di Giovanni, Schipa, and Jadlowker.

ANDREW CARNEGIE AND MUSIC

The various benefactions rendered music by the late Andrew Carnegie are thus summarized in the New York Tribune:

"Nearly thirty years ago he built Carnegie Hall, where the chief orchestral concerts have since been held and where a host of music teachers are housed. A similar hall in Pittsburgh bears his name. He was for many years the president of the New York Oratorio and other societies. It was in Great Britain, however, that he established a fund for encouragement of native composers of that country, to the dismay and even the outspoken protest of their brethren here.

"The overseas Carnegie Trust in its first year selected for publication new works by such British composers as E. L. Bainton, Granville Bantock, Frank Bridge, Rutland Boughton, H. Howells, Sir Charles Villiers Stanford and Vaughan Williams. Twenty-four compositions out of a total of 136 submitted at that time were further marked by the 'adjudicators' as being selected for 'serious consideration.' The annual report said that 'of the rest, many showed promise, and still more some trained facility in composition, but it was considered advisable, at any rate for the first year, that the scrutiny should be severe, and that only works of more than common merit should be allowed to pass.'

"There were four more works accepted in the second year, though under war conditions the publication was deferred. These included a string quartet by E. N. Hay, a pianoforte quartet by A. M. Wall, a symphonic poem for orchestra by L. A. Collingwood, and a symphonic poem, 'Wallace 1305-1905,' by Dr. William Wallace. Over eighty works were then submitted, in spite of the greater pre-occupation of all patriotic Britons in wartime. Dr. R. R. Terry, the editor, and his coadjutors, Mr. Arkwright, Dr. Buck, Miss Townsend-Warner, Mr. Howells and Dr. Wood, announced that there would be issued 'after the war' from the Clarendon Press an edition of church music of the Tudor and Elizabethan periods in England.

"The aim, according to the London Daily Telegraph, was ultimately to place in British libraries a variety of works, old and new, which for reasons of unusual or special character found little favor with the commercial publishers. As to the great mass of music of average quality and popular appeal, it was remarked that publishers will see to it that this sort of thing survives, not necessarily because they prefer mediocrity, but because mediocrity pays, and they are business men and not philanthropists.

"'I take it that the Carnegie Trust,' said a writer in that newspaper, 'leans more toward philanthropy than toward business in the conventional sense. It is then to the trust that those of us who take their art, and especially their native art, seriously, look for the best in that art. It may be that in this way they are in the position of a glorified and national wastepaper basket into which falls that cast off by the publishers. But can the fate of the trust be more glorious—or the trust more useful?

"'It may be an inversion of the position, artistically speaking, of Dives and Lazarus, but in this case would not the Carnegie Trust be playing both roles? It really would seem, then, that seriousness is the keynote of this potentially great force in our musical life; and may one suggest that, as publication has necessarily to be deferred, we may yet hear at least the two quartets referred to above? I feel sure that the London Symphony Quartet or the Philharmonic Quartet would perform them if properly approached.'

"The committee of the trust had taken up, it was added, the possibility of instituting a central organization to serve as a leading library of music, from which costly scores of important works might be lent to orchestras and choirs in poor localities. While it would not be possible, probably, to lend out choral parts, which in any case are reasonably inexpensive, it would be of great service to conductors and orchestras to have the loan of full scores and band parts, which are always costly.

"A bureau also was contemplated from which musical advice could be given to orchestras and choirs if, said the report, 'it were placed under a director of the right type.' He was to be associated with a committee of management representative of various schools of musical thought, the intention being to create a vast central organization to which all progressive choral and orchestral societies, including provincial schools of music, might be affiliated."

Gentle's Santuzza Lauded Anew

A second performance of "Cavalleria" called forth a second edition of remarkable newspaper recognition for Alice Gentle's Santuzza.

There were two good reasons for going to Ravinia to hear the second presentation of "Cavalleria Rusticana" last night, the one Miss Alice Gentle's extraordinary temperamental and vivid Santuzza, the other Riccardo Martin's singing of Turiddu. Miss Gentle will be glad to hear that my own and the public's glowing appreciation of her Santuzza was echoed, ratified by no less an authority than the illustrious Italian orchestral leader, Giorgio Polacco. Mr. Polacco said to me: "Miss Alice Gentle is the best Santuzza I have heard in America. She sings with her heart and her brains." If Mr. Eckstein is fortunate enough to have Miss Gentle next year may I suggest that she will make a glorious Tosca—both vocally and pictorially.—Chicago Evening American, July 23, 1919 (Herman Devries).

Heaven only knows how many artists I have heard sing Santuzza from the creator of the role, Gemma Bellincioni, on down, taking in Calve, Eames, Nordica and a whole mob to Raisa (not to forget the wonderful playing of Eleonora Duse), but for all that Miss Gentle freshened up the action. There was a genuine quality about it. The tone of her middle voice had sympathy in it. Miss Gentle not only has the capacity to feel but the power to send her emotion out to the audience with convincing force, and it takes genuine power to do this in "Cavalleria," where every possible note of the emotional gamut has already been sounded. She has lots of volume in her voice when she needs it, but she did not attempt to shout the music, varying her tone according to the word with fine appreciation for the story and remarkable vocal control. There is room for Miss Gentle as a dramatic soprano. She has the voice and talent.—Chicago Evening Post, July 24 (Karleton Hackett).

Press Opinions of Hans Kronold

Lovers of the cello enjoyed a treat at the Kronold recital when that artist contributed some delightful selections in a manner that evidenced his mastery of that instrument. The first number, Sonata No. 6, by Boccherini, was enthusiastically received and at once placed Mr. Kronold en rapport with his audience.—New York Evening Telegraph.

"Kol Nidrei," Bach's difficult cello solo, was well played by Mr. Kronold, as was Popper's "Rhapsodie Hongroise," which was greatly applauded.—New York Herald.

Mr. Kronold played a number of cello solos in excellent style, especially "Kol Nidrei," which he sang on his instrument with breadth of tone and fine phrasing.—New York Times.

Hans Kronold, the cellist, played with his usual dash and nerve.—New York Mail and Express.

Mr. Kronold's most interesting number was Boccherini's Sonata No. 6, in which he exhibited his mastery of the difficult composition and his skill in the rendition thereof. He also played Saint-Saens' Prelude, Davidoff's "At the Fountain," Popper's "Spinnlied" and Servais' "O Cara Memoria."—New York Daily News.

Wholly admirable were the performances of Messrs. Witherspoon and Kronold.—New York Daily Tribune.

Maud Powell and Kronold in violin and cello recital. Both are excellent artists. Mr. Kronold has a finished style and a fine tone. In Boelmann's "Variations Symphoniques" he reached matter of greater import.—New York Times.

Mr. Kronold's performance was marked throughout by his accustomed energy and fervor.—New York Globe.

From London

We know something of the chaos and loss that result from the clashing of dates of concerts and the competition between concert promoters. The managers in the United States and Canada are abandoning individualistic methods. Artists who have been the chief victims of the bad old ways will welcome the new order of things. Three days of conference and debate were needed to persuade concert managers to form a national association. Local managers feared that the national managers, mostly located in New York, would override their wishes, but it was seen that co-operation brings about improvement. "Great musical artists are best developed by progressive business methods." "Our idea is to eliminate the dishonest." The speculators who buy a block of dates from New York managers and then present their attractions in various cities without consideration for local conditions are a menace, so such "jobbers" are excluded from membership. Indiscriminate competition is to cease. Artists that are not wanted will not be forced on local managers. Many points of common interest have yet to be settled. Is England going to muddle along?—London (England) Musical Herald.

Exit Mr. Muck

Asserting that he was an American and not a German, but that he sailed for Denmark "a man without a flag or country," Dr. Muck arrived at the pier with his wife only a short time before the hour of departure. He was accompanied by an operative of the department of justice, whose duty it was to see that the musician boarded the liner.

This done, the sercret service agent warned Capt. A. G. Thomsen, commanding the vessel, to make sure that Dr. Muck did not leave it within the three mile limit. Then he took his station on the pier at the gangplank until the ship was warped out into the river.

Dr. Muck left the United States, he declared, with no regrets, "as the country is controlled by sentiment which closely borders on mob rule." He denounced bitterly newspapers which, he said, had attacked his Americanism on a story circulated by "jealous rivals" and praised "some big people in the musical world who stuck by me." These, he said, were the only persons he cared about.

The orchestra which once he had led was "a thing of the past," he declared. Twenty-nine German born members had been interned, he said, and he doubted if the group of musicians could ever be brought together. As for himself, he said, he did not know what plans he would make on arriving in Denmark.—Chicago Tribune.

The Vatican Singers

Four soloists from the Sistine Chapel Choir of the Vatican, Rome, including the only adult male soprano and male contralto in the choir, arrived yesterday for a four months' tour of this country. The tour was arranged by special permission of the Vatican and the Italian Government.

The soloists are Allesandro Gabrielli, soprano; Luigi Gentili, contralto; Izio Cecchini, tenor, and Augusto Dos Santos, basso. Their accompanist is Albert Cammetti. Their tour, which has been arranged by a musical bureau, opens in Carnegie Hall September 14. They have permission to be away from Rome until January 1. They will give seventy-five concerts.

The singers brought credentials from Basilius Cardinal Vicarius, de facto Bishop of Rome; Dr. Ernesto Boezzi, music director of St. Peter's and the Vatican, and Dom Lorenzo Perosi, the composer, who wrote that they were "very good artists" and had sung in the Sistine Chapel for years.

Gabrielli is said to be the only living natural male soprano. He is tall and well built, and is 33 years old. He is unmarried and lives with his parents in Rome. He was in the Italian army and was invalided. He walks with a slight limp from rheumatism.

Gentili, the contralto, is married and has five children, including twins. He was a brother-in-law of Prof. George Olcott of Columbia University, an archaeologist, who died in 1912 in Rome.

Cecchini is a lyric tenor. He has sung in Rome at the concerts of St. Cecelia's Orchestra, and has appeared with Battistini, the opera basso. He sang the tenor part of Perosi's "Resurrection of Lazarus." Dos Santos, the basso, was in the Italian military service.

The coming of the Italian church singers is an event of great interest in musical circles, since it is the first appearance here of singers from the Sistine Choir. This choir is composed of thirty-two choral chaplains, whose special privilege it is to appear at the ecclesiastical functions at which the Pope appears in person. Some of the music which will be sung in America was written in the fourth century.

The coming of St. Cecelia's Orchestra, with which Cecchini sang, and of a contingent from three choirs of Rome recently was announced.—New York Herald.

Musical Training Not Essential to Director

Which makes the more successful operatic director, a musician or a business man?

Somebody who enlivens porch parties and summer dinners by questions that are both pertinent and topical asked my opinion on this matter.

The only answer I could and can find is mere facts. Contemporaneous records show us that the artist-musician is not always the most successful manager or director. In my experience abroad, I have, many times, been a witness to this fact. Here are a few instances:

Halanzier, who made a fortune of several millions of francs as an operatic director in Marseilles, and who was also, for several years, head of the Grand Opera in Paris, could not distinguish between a tenor or a baritone, a contralto or a soprano. His successor was a finely cultivated musician and composer, Vaucorbeil, but Vaucorbeil, alas, lost a fortune within two years, and was forced to resign. When he took the reins at the Opera he mounted an old opera by Rossini, "Le Comte Ory," and Auber's "La Muette de Portici." The artists at the Opera were dumfounded at such a choice and did not hesitate to pronounce on the certain failure of both. To the question, Why on earth are you going to put on the "Comte Ory"? Vaucorbeil answered: "Rossini was such a dear, dear friend of mine, and I really love the 'Comte Ory.' All prophecies were fulfilled. Both operas were distinct failures.

Maurice Grau was a great director. He assembled the finest companies heard in America, and made a big success, but he, too, could not tell the difference between a tenor or a baritone, and music to him was an unexplored field.

Gatti-Casazza, head of the Metropolitan Opera House, although a cultured man, did not make music his life work. He was a civil engineer in Italy, if I mistake not.

Hammerstein, who made millions during the palmy days of his operatic activities, began life in the tobacco business.

Albert Carre, a household name in Paris, where he directs the destiny of the Opera Comique, began his career as "premier comique" at the Theater du Vaudeville in a play called "Les Vivacites du Capitaine Tic."

Jules Pasdeloup, founder of the Concerts Populaires in Paris, was appointed director of the Theater Lyrique, where he mounted Gluck's "Iphigenie en Tauride," Berlioz' "Les Troyens" and Wagner's "Rienzi." He was declared bankrupt after one year.

Leon Carvalho, a fine musician and singer, who gave "Faust," "Romeo and Juliet" and "Mirelle" of Gounod, as well as "Philemon and Baucis" and Masse's "Noces de Jeanette," all "premiers," goes on record as having declared bankruptcy.

Claudius, one of the most successful directors in France, was a business man and made a small fortune. They tell this story about him: Once, during a rehearsal of "Herodiade" at Angouleme, he noticed a bassoon player reading a newspaper. "Hey, there," he called, "what are you doing there? Do I pay you to read the paper or to play? Why aren't you playing?" his large (?) salary, by the way, was 140 francs a month. The bassoon answered: "I have thirty-seven bars to rest, so I can afford to read." Furiously the director yelled: "The cheek of the man! Do I pay you to rest? Play, man, play!"

Here in Ravinia we have a business man at the head of the opera—Louis Eckstein, who, though not a musician, knows enough to give us a remarkably well balanced and well organized association of the finest singers, an orchestra de primo cartello and grand opera that is worth much more at popular prices. Furthermore, Mr. Eckstein is on the road to big successes, and even if he does not need the money, it is another fact to add to my list.

I do not know that I have proved anything, after all. Maybe it's a matter of luck, anyway.—Herman Devries in Chicago American.

The score has a decidedly classic atmosphere. It is a simple, sincere and earnest piece of work, and should prove popular.—Kansas City Journal.

It is especially suitable for Christmas time, though it will do just as well at any time whenever a children's chorus is in need of a singable and pleasing cantata.—Musical Courier, New York.

The Extension Concerts

If ever a new set of concerts received a good artistic send off, it was the Musical Extension Series, which began its downtown career last night with Arthur Middleton as the focus of interest. This series, according to the explanation given in the folders, has a duplex, co-ordinating function; on the one side to bring music to the people, in their neighborhood centers, and more particularly in the churches; on the other to bring the people to music, this to be accomplished in the city's center. Last night's event was the first of four, all to take place in Orchestra Hall.—Edward C. Moore in Chicago Evening Journal.

Ravinia Park

Ravinia Park under the direction of Louis Eckstein has done a great service for a very large community. What we are trying to develop hereabouts in a groping fashion is an esthetic enjoyment of life. We seem to realize the importance of this, but to be uncertain and hesitating in the processes.

There is nothing uncertain about the Ravinia processes and there is nothing dubious in its success. The place is a marvel in middle western society. It claims attention and rewards it. It invited a mediocre venture in amusement and got a great one in artistry. It has attracted this summer the great singers of the New York company and the great crowds which wanted to hear them.

Ravinia Park pays for its natural advantages by laboring under some natural disadvantages. It is an undoubted task for a Chicago music lover living on the south side to get out to the park and back in the same night. The park has proved itself against that disadvantage.

Its establishment was not conceived uopn the plan of the present management. Opera is sung at Ravinia at winter standards of the Auditorium, but the material surroundings of the stage are a handicap. The material surroundings of the place are a joy, but the physical embarrassments of trying to produce opera upon so small a stage in so commendable a style are enormous.

Mr. Eckstein is trying to raise the guaranty from $200,000 to $250,000. The increase will permit the alterations which themselves will permit an adequate production of opera at the park.

The park is invaluable in the esthetic endeavor of these parts. It needs this additional guaranty.—Chicago Tribune.

"L'Oracolo" at Ravinia

The return of Antonio Scotti to Ravinia Friday was the signal for the gathering of the largest audience known in the history of the park. Not only was every seat inside and out of the pavilion taken, but the space beyond was occupied by a vast throng that came to catch at least what it could at long distance.

The Chinese opera, "The Oracle," came to a hearing again, in which Scotti once more demonstrated his ability to act as well as to sing superbly, wherefor he received his due measure of excited applause.

Afterward the last act of "Butterfly" was given with the remainder of the cast as before, but with Scotti as the American consul, Sharpless. He did it, of course, extremely well, as far as the audience was concerned, hitting the bell every time he tried. But naturally the ideal impersonator of this part is an American who, if he can sing and act like Chalmers, for instance, can carry through the illusion off genuine sympathy for Butterfly's tragic plight better than can an Italian or a Frenchman. For, after all, our men answer the question, "What is a woman for, anyway?" differently than do the men of other countries.

Florence Easton and her associate artists carried through their impersonations in the deft manner of preceding performances, excepting that Frances Ingram seemed to have allowed herself to slump in the interim. "Give us this day our daily practice" ought to be in every singer's prayer book.—Henriette Weber in Herald-Examiner.

Helene Kanders

Extracts from New York notices:

Miss Helene Kanders cannot complain of the success of her first song recital, which took place in Carnegie Hall last Tuesday evening. Despite bad weather, the beautiful young soprano attracted an audience of large proportions. She began with Beethoven's difficult concert aria, "Oh, Perfido." In this number, which is considered a stumbling block for any save finished sopranos, Miss Kanders gave an illustration of her achievements that was eminently satisfactory. She possesses a voice of unusual power and range, and has a beautiful mezzo voce which she uses with taste and effect. Her phrasing was broad and her sense of the dramatic artistically revealed. Her versatility was shown in a sympathetic rendition of works by composers of many schools.—New York American.

Miss Helene Kanders, who gave a song recital at Carnegie Hall last evening, will be remembered as having appeared at the Metropolitan last season. She is a dramatic soprano, and a good one to boot. Last night she proved her dramatic qualities in Beethoven's "Ah, Perfido." She has a really excellent high soprano voice, well cultivated and well under control.—New York Herald.

Miss Helene Kanders, a soprano, who last season was a member of the Metropolitan Opera Company, gave a song recital last night at Carnegie Hall. The few appearances Miss Kanders made last year in opera revealed a voice of beauty and purity of timbre. These qualities were again in evidence last night. She gave Lenormand's "Les Vautours" and Fourdrain's "Chanson Norwegienne" especially well, the large audience showing its appreciation in generous applause. Her beauty and general bearing are distinctly in her favor. Miss Kanders has an unusually beautiful voice.—New York Tribune.

May Peterson in Los Angeles

A representative philharmonic audience greeted May Peterson, coloratura soprano, at Trinity Auditorium last night, and discriminatingly applauded her best efforts. Her program, made up of typical songs of the past and present, was very interesting, and though of comparatively light culling, was none the less instructive.

Her voice is of the clear, flexible timbre, but is admirably fitted to the ballad form, having an unusual depth and roundness acquired through perfect relaxation and easy inflation, her every tone being projected far forward and upward and floated outward upon the breath until it fairly shimmers into brilliant coloring. In addition to her vocal art, she would be called beautiful and charming, and takes the audience into a confidence that is irresistibly personal.

Her singing of Spohr's "Rose Softly Blooming" was winsomely natural and fluent, and her words, not too carefully formed, however, found expression in her mobile features. Mozart's "Allelujah!" was a true exposition of about all of the moods of that joyous word. The Gavotte from Massenet's "Manon" was a little gem of vocal shading. The "Songs My Mother Taught Me," from Dvorak, was not so perfect in portamento as it might have been, but in the wide modulation gushed forth in full emotional breath.

Her French songs were given the proper delivery in that she entirely participated in the thought in hand, and told her story in good French. Her vanishing soft tones in the "Wearin' Awa'" were breathlessly audible. "De Ol' Ark's a-Movin'," an old Negro spiritual, harmonized by Guion, was humorously characteristic. A distinct compliment was paid Gertrude Ross in the placing of her song, "The Open Road," as the final number, where its full value was appreciated.—Carl Bronson in the Los Angeles Herald.

Van Vliet at Decatur, Ind.

Cornelius Van Vliet demonstrated to Decatur what Decatur has always known him to be—a solo artist of remarkable ability, but this time Mr. Van Vliet appeared as the sole performer, not as the talented first cellist of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra.

It was a great house that welcomed him back, and the audience was with him from beginning to end. From a great repertory Mr. Van Vliet chose wisely. There was not a number that was not pleasing. . . . After the Weber Waltz No. 2, which Mr. Van Vliet put in as his second encore, a remarkable number, starting with a thumping pizzicato, and containing some bewilderingly wonderful double harmonics, people all but cheered. Mr. Van Vliet could not have done better than to have repeated it, which was just what he did.

Whether it was for full, rich round tones for which he strived, or for a lithesome, bounding bow spiccato, for the most delicate notes which people strained their ears to hear, Mr. Van Vliet's technic was perfect. His treatment of the Porpora Sonata, with its striking contrasts, grave to gay, left nothing to be desired. . . . The audience had no intention of going home when the exquisite chanson Napolitaine was finished, and if a hint was intended by the "Cradle Song," composed by Richard Czerwonky, former concertmaster of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, and dedicated to Mr. Van Vliet, it refused to take it. The little number has a beautiful melody and was applauded until Mr. Van Vliet came out to play positively the last, Popper's Tarantelle, a number that should only be attempted by a musician able like Mr. Van Vliet to play in lightninglike tempo.

It was a surprise to most of those in the audience that an entire cello program could be so interesting and enjoyable. . . . There was no doubt that it was pleasing to every one, judging from the number of encores Mr. Van Vliet was called upon to play. He responded generously and played many extra numbers. His remarkable skill in handling the instrument was displayed in every number.

JANE STEPHENSON GIVES INTERESTING PROGRAM

Recently Jane Stephenson, soprano, and Clement Laskowski, tenor, gave a recital of songs at the Fine Arts Building. Both are students of Ellen Kinsman Mann, and she may feel happy indeed over the fine success attained by them at this time. Beulah Taylor Porter was artistic and musicianly in the piano accompaniments for both singers.

This occasion was for Miss Stephenson a first appearance in professional work for some time, and it is a pleasure to note her well-deserved success. Her voice is a soprano of good range and quality, used with good effect in the presentation of songs. She gave a fine list of worth while things with the sincerity and musicianship that counts much for success in both teaching and singing. Her manner is gracious and she seems happy in her work.

The well-liked Aria from "Herodiade" was the opening number, while numbers by Branscombe, Ronald and Clough-Leighter were very effective as a second group. Especially good was Miss Stephenson's singing in "The Morning Wind" and "Pluck This Little Flower."

Of two groups presented later in the evening, Ware's "Joy of the Morning" and Clough-Leighter's "O, Heart of Mine," were delightful in interpretative values and tone color.

WHY NOT GET ACQUAINTED WITH OURSELVES

By GAYLORD YOST

How easy it is to laugh at something we do not understand! How natural it is to condemn a work of art upon first acquaintance! The discouraging part of being an exponent of a new school accrues chiefly from the ungratefulness and hasty judgment of the unenlightened.

Of all the art forms, music undoubtedly suffers most from premature judgment. How often do we read the flippant review of some critic concerning a new musical composition which he has heard only once and straightway proceeds to lambast both the composer and performer. The latter because he has wasted so much time in learning a perfectly bad composition and then has the pertinence to inflict it upon his hearers. And, sad but true, the majority accept the critic's judgment.

An examination of the concert programs of the instrumentalists from year to year discloses that practically all piano programs are made up of Bach, Beethoven, Brahms, Schumann, Chopin and Liszt. Masters all and immortals. Indeed, the works of these great men could not be discarded, for to do so would mean to deprive the world of many gems of art and strip the pianist of the bone and sinew of his repertoire. Violinists, too, play the Beethoven, Brahms, Bruch and Mendelssohn concertos, as well as some of the meteoric war horses by Yieniawski, Sarasate and others, intermingling their programs with a few bewhiskered tunes of the seventeenth century, dressed in modern garb, frequently by themselves.

Occasionally we find an artist who evinces the spirit of progress and includes in his programs several modern and unknown works. But he is a rare bird, for the hostile pen of the critic tends to keep the majority of recitalists in the straight and narrow.

However, I am sure all will agree that there is only one way to become familiar with a new musical composition, and that is by repeated hearings. No one should have the audacity to pass judgment upon a new composition after one hearing, for history proves that usually the critics and most people have been wrong in their estimate of new art creations. In fact, nearly all of the great works handed down to us were given the icy frappe at the time of their initial production.

It is not to be expected that the majority of individuals enjoy and understand musical compositions which are keyed in strange and weird tonalities. Enjoyment and understanding are the result of comprehension, and the latter cannot exist without an education. So it becomes evident that the mission of any artist is not only to give joy to his hearers, but to guide, enlighten and broaden their intellectual and (may I not say) emotional comprehension.

A well-balanced program should, of course, embody the classic and romantic schools, as well as the modern. And programs of the distinguished foreigners, most of whom are now residing in this country, should include at least one or a group of American compositions.

The deplorable attitude of Americans at this time is to poke fun at and belittle their own creative talent. The very individuals who have shouted patriotism from the housetops are the first to ignore their own composers. That this attitude of jocularity results from ignorance, no one who has looked into the matter can well dispute, for there is a great array of American musical compositions in all forms waiting to be heard, and, mind you, after intimate acquaintance, will assume their deserved place in the world of tonal beauty.

The American flag stands for democracy, but most Americans (?) hoist the red flag when their creative brother appears on the horizon.

Why not get acquainted with ourselves?

SUMMER NOTES FROM NEW YORK

By JOSEPH DE VALDOR

Mana-Zucca at the Stadium

By the time these lines appear in print the summer season of the Stadium will be at an end. Unfortunately the rain has effected a serious drawback and the deficit, I surmise, will be the heaviest of all seasons. The artistic ends of the season have been more satisfactory. Many prominent soloists have appeared and quite a number of unknown instrumentalists and singers have been given opportunities to display their virtues and defects. Arnold Volpe showed a marked progress in his conducting and also in his arrangements of the programs.

On Wednesday evening, August 20, the progressive composer, Mana-Zucca, was the star attraction. This young lady has pianistic gifts and an uncommon knowledge in the handling of the piano. Her technic is superb, her fluent tone is admirable, and her musicianship as composer and player is certainly an outstanding feature. She offered her own piano concerto and demonstrated that she possesses inspiration. She played ideally, and the audience was not slow in recognizing her great talent. Miss Zucca is scheduled to play the same composition at the Metropolitan Opera House next season.

Music at the Strand

For the week ending August 24 the Strand attracted large audiences, due perhaps to the shutting up of the theaters on account of the actors' strike.

Since Oscar Spirescu met a premature death the orchestra has declined in quality. Mr. Edouarde conducted in a rendition of excerpts from "Cavalleria Rusticana," and we only regretted that Mascagni's music didn't sound any too well.

A baritone, heralded from the Scala of Milan (?), by the name of Carlo Ferretti, sang "Lolita" (Buzzi-Peccia), and though he has a pleasant voice and sings with sufficient assurance, it was impossible not to notice a very pronounced tremolo, already a disconcerting factor to an eventful career.

Eldora Stanford, soprano, possesses some good top notes and a fair medium, but lack of good schooling and the off-pitch singing will mar, for the present, her success. "Lullaby," by Kreisler, and "Annie Laurie" were her selections.

The intermezzo of the "Jewels of Madonna," by Wolf-Ferrari, was also rendered by the orchestra.

He has proven this through his devotion to his work. Miss Lee has come to the fore through the efforts of her representative, who found in her a worthy artist to represent.

Campanini Engages Jadlowker

The number of tenors at the Chicago Opera Association will increase rapidly if the plans of Cleofonte Campanini materialize. A cable from Salsomaggiore, Italy, where Campanini is resting, announces the engagement of Herman Jadlowker for the Chicago season of 1919-1920. It is not known as yet what this tenor is expected to sing, but those who know him—and many have heard him here—may expect some interesting performances. What an enviable list of tenors is on Mr. Campanini's roster—Edward Johnson, Charles Fontaine, Tito Schipa, Forrest Lamont, Alessandro Bonci and perhaps others, but let us wait. Meanwhile we cherish the hope that the above will come to the fore so that Mr. Campanini's season may really be a season of eclat.

Music at the Rivoli

For the week ending August 24 Erno Rapee conducted the orchestra in a rendition of the uninteresting work by Moritz Moskowski called "Moskowskiana." Alberto Bachman, the concert master, played Melody in F Sharp Minor (Chopin-Riesenfeld) and "Rondo de Lutins" (Bazzini). He displayed good technic, a clear intonation, but an insignificant tone. We had difficulty in hearing him. In the duet from the "Tales of Hoffman" Miss Mary Newton, contralto, showed vocal superiorities versus her soprano colleague, Miss Mary Ball, whose voice is not of distinctive quality.

Firmin Swinnen played "March," by Samuel Wesley, on the organ.

Rudolph Reuter Plays at the Stadium

The monotony of constant vocal soloists was broken by the appearance of Rudolph Reuter, the Chicago pianist, on August 20, who was the soloist, and who played with extreme skill and fine tonal effect the Rubinstein concerto, and an encore by the same composer.

Mr. Reuter has demonstrated, long ago, that his technic is flawless, and his musical interpretations of his numbers prove him to be not only a mere pianist, but an artist deserving amply the title. Harriet McConnell was the vocal soloist and Arnold Volpe conducted the orchestra.

Having conquered the Stadium audiences through his superb pianistic feats, Rudolph Reuter, the Chicago pianist, paid the writer a welcome visit to the Music News office. I found him in splendid health and in glorious spirits. He informed me that the season of 1919-1920 looks exceedingly bright for him. We do not doubt a fulfillment. A good artist must win, in spite of the ups and downs of life. Mr. Reuter will appear more often next season through the East, although western audiences will also enjoy hearing him. Hans Kronold's Activities

There are no probabilities of a recess for this splendid cellist. The entire Summer has been consumed by work, and work again. The portals of the new season will open within a month or so. Mr. Kronold then will pursue his activities with the same regularity as in the past. He is expected to be busy and he himself loves it so. Beginning September 15, he will resume his teaching. Mr. Kronold goes on records with the Pathe Freres Phonograph Company. He signed a contract for three years to make records, exclusively, for this concern. Lovers of music will enjoy his playing of "The Cradle Song," by Goddard; "Kol Nidrei" (Orthodox Version); "Eili Eili," and some Irish airs. They will be out by the first of September.

Maria Winetzkaja, Marianne Carell and Joseph Mendelsohn

This is a trio of excellent vocalists. Though their names are not yet in everybody's mouth, they will, gradually, become as popular as their older colleagues. Maria Winetzkaja is famous throughout the Latin American countries because of her frequent operatic appearances. She is a splendid mezzo-soprano and an artist of great abilities and is expected to appear in the United States in concerts and recitals during the season of 1919.

Marianne Carell, mezzo-contralto, and Joseph Mendelsohn, baritone, are aspirants to fame. Both possess unusual voices and their career is practically assured by their exceptional talent.

A Popular Evening at the Stadium

With the return of the fair weather, music lovers again began to pour into the huge stadium, as witness the enormous audience of the August 23rd concert. Mr. Volpe opened the evening with a rendition of the "William Tell" Overture, followed by the playing of Fantasie "Faust," by Gounod. The second part of the program Mr. Volpe conducted "Kol Nidrei" (traditional Hebrew song), by Bruch-Jungnickel, Fantasie "Il Trovatore" and Bacchanale "Samson et Dalila," by Saint-Saens, and the March "Slav," by Tschaikowsky.

Mr. Volpe's knowledge of the Russian composers is an undeniable asset. He conducts them well and brings out effective results. But when it comes to compositions of other schools he shows proofs of limited abilities and knowledge. The Stadium orchestra, in spite of its members belonging to the Metropolitan, Philharmonic and Symphony Society of New York, has not attained yet the quality of an artistic body. It lacks co-ordination.

Sonya Medvedieff, soprano, was the soloist in a rendition of "Pleurez Mes yeux," from "Le Cid" (Massenet). She is a dramatic soprano whose voice is of distinctive beauty and power; it carries far into the vast field of the Stadium. If Mme. Medvedieff's employment of her voice were not defective, if her breath control had not hampered her splendid voice, and if off pitch singing had not marred her work, she would have created a furore. These defects can be remedied.

Another soloist was Cantor Kanewsky. He sang, or at least he endeavored to sing, the Aria from "La Juive," by Halevy. His style of singing is typical of the synagogue. His throaty tones, the limited range of his organ and the inability to cope with the score places him in the ranks of the unfit.

On October 2 John McCormack will be the soloist and on October 7 he will be soloist at Portland. Ernest Davis, tenor, will be the soloist at Portland on October 2. He will also appear at Bangor on October 3. William Rogers Chapman is the director in chief.

Attention New York Morning Telegraph

We are indeed flattered to see the New York Morning Telegraph copy "news" from our journal, but, in justice to ourselves, the above paper ought to pay us the compliment of mentioning the Music News as the source of the copied news. It is true that on one or two occasions the Telegraph gave us credit for reproducing in their Sunday edition some reviews written by our collaborators, but I noted in their news columns items originally printed in our journal without the mention from Music News. It is a matter of courtesy, a tradition respected by the entire press.

MARGARET CAMERON—ASTOLFO PESCIA

When one speaks of a successful singer, the teacher should be mentioned, too, as an inevitable factor of her success, and if I comment upon the voice of Margaret Cameron I must necessarily dwell on Mr. Pescia, too, even though it be but briefly.

It was an inspiriting evening. The air was refreshing, invigorating and wholesome, for such conditions certainly prevail around Riverside Drive. If you are in this particular neighborhood on a beautiful evening and take a bird's-eye view of Riverside Drive, comparisons with Lake Lucerne of Switzerland can not be avoided, and when in this scene of natural beauty one has the privilege of hearing beautiful singing, then one could wish no more.

In one of the most picturesque spots on Riverside Drive lives Miss Margaret Cameron, and during a recent interview I prevailed upon her to sing. My eyes fell on the score of "Cavalleria" and we chose the aria "Voi lo sapete, O Mama."

I confess that my skeptical mind anticipated but little, but I hoped eagerly for a disappointment, and I am glad to say that all the skepticism was brushed away during Miss Cameron's singing. Hers is a voice of pure lyric soprano and not infrequent dramatic touches in its upper register. It has power and a resonance of distinctive quality. The medium is agreeable. In the rendition of her aria she gave eloquent proof of the temperament so necessary to a singer's career. She sings with animation and enunciates intelligently. Naturally Miss Cameron has not yet attained the goal of perfect singing, but through the guidance of her excellent teacher, Astolfo Pescia, she will attain the results which both are striving for.

THE ALL-AMERICAN EXPOSITION

According to the Chicago Tribune, the "All-American Exposition" at the Coliseum came near a fatal split on the question of German Day.

And, as usual, the row was started in the music department and the onus laid upon musicians.

It is a pity that anyone should be put in charge of such an important event as this is supposed to be who would, even remotely, allow the suspicion that we need or want any German help or propaganda, either in music or in any other department.

The changing of the name of German Day to that of Army Day is a travesty.

Simplicity in Singing

A SERIES OF PRACTICAL ARTICLES

By ELIZABETH FORESMAN BAGG
(Copyright 1919 by Mary Elizabeth Bagg)

PART IX

Practice

No treatise upon voice culture would be complete without a few words upon the subject of practice. We have said elsewhere that it is not the amount of practice but the kind that determines the progress of the student. In fact, I have had pupils who have made amazing progress on a very small amount of practice, simply because they applied during every minute of their work the rules I had laid down for them in their lessons. It was a case of an ounce of mentality being worth a pound of misdirected effort.

The average pupil does not know how to practice. She has to be shown, and shown most carefully and painstakingly. Even after this has been done the teacher can often tell from the work brought back in the succeeding lesson that she has not understood. It is for this reason that it is better for the beginner to take at least two lessons a week. At first she will gain little except at her lessons, and if too long an interval is allowed to elapse between lessons much time is wasted on repetition because the pupil has forgotten the teacher's directions once out of the studio and the practice time has been lost. Later on, when she has learned how to help herself, she can afford to take one lesson a week; in the beginning it is apt to prove false economy.

It is better for the voice to practice several times a day for a short period than to do the work in one practice hour as a pianist might be able to do. One must not overwork the vocal organ. It is quite possible, too, you know, to put in a good deal of practice upon a silent study of your musical texts, in developing your ideas of interpretation, phrasing, etc., and in becoming thoroughly familiar with your words.

One of the difficulties in regard to practice is the habit that so many people have of practicing on the edge of the voice. I do not mean that you should strain the voice by shouting or screaming. I mean that you must use the voice, exercise it, give it out with directness and energy, just as you must put life and force into any physical exercise in order to gain results. As the youngsters say, you must have punch.

A teacher seldom enjoys the advantage of hearing his own pupils at their practice. He has to judge by the results which they bring him at their lessons. Sometimes, however, he hears the pupils of other teachers; people who live in the neighborhood, perhaps, or who practice in a near-by studio. Such opportunities will often suggest to him why this or that pupil of his own is not doing the work he has a right to expect of her.

Who has not heard the girl who runs lightly up and down her scales, filling none of the tones, giving absolutely no more exercise to the voice than the woman in the gymnasium who lifts her arms feebly and lets them drop again, with no precision and no energy, gives to her muscles? To be sure, our American habit of apartment dwelling has something to do with this way of practicing. Some people are afraid to sing out for fear of annoying others, and it is a difficult proposition looked at from this point of view. Still, we must remember that a voice properly handled can be pleasing even when it is singing exercises, and so take courage and go ahead.

A shiftless and unthinking manner of practice will not bring the desired results in music any more than in mathematics. I have heard people go through a most elaborate system of scales, exercises and vocalises without giving to a single tone the fullness and body which must be there in order to develop it. Practice with a mezzo voce tone. This employs breath control, placing of the voice and part body; it means practicing with the half voice, but it does not mean with a lack of energy or breadth. Nor does it mean either sotto voce or humming. It is this tone that will grow in practice from day to day, bringing into being the full voice needed later on.

Then there is the pupil who loves to sing songs and who will not practice exercises. I have never been in sympathy with those teachers who keep their pupils on exercises alone for months and months without allowing them the relaxation of songs. In the first place, there is so much to be learned in the study of certain simple songs that I am not willing to dispense with their use. One can use them to assist in the placing and the building of the voice just as one uses the exercises, with the additional value of accustoming the pupil to the use of words instead of mere sounds. It is good for her to work into the difficult handling of words through the gradual medium of simple song singing.

To be sure, we have excellent exercises with words, but there is no doubt that it is an encouragement to a student to feel that she is "getting somewhere," and that is the feeling that song singing gives her. It also educates her along the lines of interpretation, diction and phrasing. She is taught to employ her method for breath control, etc., as easily in songs as in exercises. I have a number of the simpler songs which I give to my pupils just as soon as I see that they are beginning to comprehend the idea, and their voices show a sufficient degree of proper placing. I can build body into their voices by means of the songs, used, of course, in connection with the exercises; and by allowing the student a few songs for her practice, I am better able to make her do the exercise practicing that she must do.

We have all known cases of the girl who has studied a year, sometimes longer, and whose teacher has never given her a song and refuses to allow her to sing for her friends. I think, also, that we sometimes are tempted to believe that there is a good deal of faddism, if nothing worse, in this attitude. Personally, I think there is nothing better for a young singer than to cultivate the habit of singing whenever she is asked, providing she confines her efforts to music that is within her grasp. By so doing she acquires an ease of manner and a confidence in herself which will stand her in good stead later on. I do not believe in allowing her to inflict operatic arias upon a suffering public when neither her voice nor her mentality reach beyond simple song singing. A great many students forget this, and because they are allowed to sing arias in the studio, where they are necessary at certain points of their development, insist upon singing them in public, to their own detriment and the public's ineffable boredom.

A FEW SUGGESTIONS AS TO HOW MUSIC CLUBS MAY BECOME MORE LIKE CLUBS

By MILO E. BENEDICT

In the age or period just passed, it appeared that man was made for music. Now we see man becoming strong enough to face music and to declare that music was made for him. We are trying to understand now how music may serve. In the presence of music we do not always wish, in the language of Josh Billings, to "set down and gro stupid with resignashun, and git weak over the buty of her attributes."

As a leader, music is uncompromising. It asks for all the attention. The social intelligence must withdraw while music is in the speaker's chair. For this very ample reason it is worth while to consider how music may be gracefully and becomingly dethroned. We should not like to have music light out and not come back. Yet, if a club is to be a club, one must provide for the support of the social spirit, otherwise music's usurping power may easily deprive us of the right to be social. It is less to our credit, I believe, than we think to let music drive us into retirement. We then become, to borrow a phrase from Thoreau, "the mere tools of our tools."

It is well to be overawed by music, when music is legitimately doing her best; but to be always overawed, or to be stiffened into uncongeniality by the critical weight of one's ideas respecting the performance of any given piece of music is to give music an unbalanced preference over ourselves. The music becomes a kind of idolatry. If there is any pleasantry in music, then why so much seriousness? Are neighbors no longer neighbors in a concert room?

I was impressed upon going into a building where a gathering of workers was busy making garments for the destitute Belgian children to note the all-pervading cheerfulness amid which the work was being put through. Now, one would naturally expect to find the cheerfulness abundant in the music club and soberness in the workroom, for is it not one of the functions of music to bring cheer, and is not weariness one of the products of work? But here, apparently, was music promoting weariness and labor promoting cheer. How very strange! Something must be wrong. Either we do not understand the management of music, or music is not what we take it to be. We have become subjugated. We have let music put us out of harmony with ourselves. In its subtle way it has elbowed us out of any possible appreciation of anything else.

If you are placed where nothing can be spoken, you are where society can not exist. But, you say, it is impossible to be attentive to music and to society at the same time, and it would be, moreover, exceedingly unfair to music not to give it the attention it deserves.

Very true. And for that reason we need some device which will provide relief from the overtaxing enthrallment of music. I would suggest some kind of regulator, perhaps someone with a mallet or gavel who will come down with a whack on hard wood when it is time to resume normal breathing and take notice of the company. Taken entirely upon her own terms, music is essentially antisocial. She sees to it that our medium of communication with others is lost. But that is nothing against music. We value music for that very thing. It is one of its powers we appreciate the most. Suffering from it is all unnecessary.

If the music clubs, when they assemble, would avoid regular formations, such as being seated in straight rows, they would lessen the tendency to unsociability. When people are set in rows they expect only to be entertained or ministered to, never to shed any of their light on others. People will not, or cannot, be social when set in solid formations like the shingles on a house. It would be better to let them stand. People will speak when standing who would not speak sitting. At one of the musical gatherings I noticed a lady who had found a chair an out-of-the-way place, and by that circumstance she found it very easy to make herself agreeable. But the moment she was ushered to a seat in the straight rows she spoke not a word, though nearer to many of her acquaintances than before. It was all in the formality of the seats.

When it is recognized more fully that music is always self-sufficient and bent upon absorbing all attention, more pains will be taken at the music clubs to avoid letting music become a continuous performance, and incidentally dampening to the individual. Chairs should be provided, not benches or pews. Small tables would help, as also would the serving of tea, coffee, raw oysters—anything to set up a little rivalry between diverse tastes. There might be flowers, pictures, books within reach. Also the effect upon the performers of appearing before listeners who are favorable to approaches and able to express some thought upon the music offered is a great advantage to them. A club need not be judicial. What most music clubs are for is to let music be heard. There is a lot of good music that is not heard. Criticism might well be consigned to the newspaper men. For the club members to engage in criticizing the performers would invite disaster, but the music presented should be open to comment and free discussion.

ADA LOUISE BELL

Ada Louise Bell, soprano, who has had a studio in Kimball Hall, Chicago, ever since her return from abroad, seven years ago, has accepted a position as teacher of voice at the Burnett Conservatory, at Walla Walla, Wash., and will leave Chicago for her new home next week.

Chicago thus loses an excellent singer and a fine teacher.

Miss Bell has a voice of beauty and power, and her study has been so extended as to have given her fine musicianship and a practically unlimited repertoire.

She has been more engaged with teaching in Chicago than with concert work, and yet in the latter field she has never failed to score pronounced success whenever she has appeared.

As a teacher, she is resourceful and painstaking, and these qualities, combined with her fine personality and extensive knowledge of repertoire, have made her exceedingly popular and successful.

She has to her credit many young artists who have made fine successes on the concert stage and in church work.

"SIMPLICITY OR COMPLEXITY?"

Truth is the one eternally effective force in the universe.

Two conditions are necessary for the reception of Truth—(1) a live, unbiased consciousness; (2) simplicity and accuracy of statement.

Truth is Light! Truth is Revelation!
Truth is the world's "one great need."

Why, let me ask, do composers so persistently complicate the expression of Truth?

By Truth in music I mean, broadly speaking, that which inspires and blesses. A simple, inspired melody thrills, and every art message naturally, sincerely and simply written edifies and uplifts.

Why complicate these beautiful ideas with an intricate maze of harmonic transitions and dexterous rhythmic problems? (Simplicity seems unpopular.)

Not aiming to answer the question, "Why do composers so persistently complicate the expression of Truth?" in an orderly, sequential form, it might be stated: (1) Because the subjects selected by composers for musical expression are often weird and uncanny, necessitating the employment of unusual harmonic and rhythmic forms to express them.

Carl Fischer's catalogue includes a collection of ten compositions by Lee Ornstein. Numbers IV, V, VI, X have the following titles: "The Wrath of the Despoiled," "Night Brooding Over the Battlefield," "A Dirge of the Trenches," and "Dance of the Dead." In compositions with such titles one would naturally expect to find that which might justly be termed ungodly, not to say devilish.

A composer who meditates on such themes, soon or late, is sure to write (musical) monstrosities.

(2) To Affect Originality. Composers have been writing music for several hundreds years, and it would seem that every form of musical expression had long since been exhausted. There is an instinctive desire in some to express ideas in a way they have never been written before. There may also be present a sincere desire to write good music, but the desire to be original is paramount.

Originality without genuine musical worth as its inspiration must ever miss the mark. To what length these reachers for originality will go it is not my purpose to state.

(3) To Show Dexterity, Ingenuity, Skill. Scholarship may be employed for that which is lofty, and also for that which is debased. Skill is a commendable attainment, but when used merely for display the product would most fittingly find its way into the secluded privacy of the post-graduate class room. It might be of value for analysis.

(4) To Hide Lack of Real Worth. If the complexities of some compositions could be dissipated very little would remain. Lacking genuine inspiration, some writers seek to hide behind a labyrinth of unusual melodic forms, peculiar harmonic transitions, complicated rhythmic devices, and, last of all, strange instruments seldom employed. Not satisfied yet, some writers add to complexity, undue length, and thereby destroy what little interest might remain.

Other reasons why composers prefer a complex style might be given, but these must suffice.

The musician should have a mission, and this mission should be an avowed purpose to give the world that which uplifts, edifies, inspires, blesses, and educates. This should be the one aim—and no morbidity of concept, desire for originality, dexterous display of skill, nor indulgence in subtle complexities of form should deter one from this lofty purpose.

A genuine musical idea is a pearl of great price and exceeds in value a thousand intricate effusions which last for a day and are gone forever.

HUGO RIESENFELD

A UNIQUE CONDUCTOR

Hugo Riesenfeld, the director of the Rivoli and Rialto, is an exponent of the new school of idealists. Mr. Riesenfeld's illustrious career of art, from the day he was graduated with high honors from the Vienna Academy of Music, has been signalized by the lofty ideals of the igneous craftsmen—by the broad vision and intellectual prowess of the born scholar of art.

Mr. Riesenfeld's entry into the managerial and executive ranks was singular in that the motion picture industry, so far as can be determined, had never before given rise to a man so completely imbued with the fundamentals of musical art and so thoroughly obsessed of its importance in this era of pretentious entertainment.

Mr. Riesenfeld was born on January 28, 1879, in Vienna. His Bohemian father and Hungarian mother bequeathed to him the inherent talent of the master musician. At the age of seven years—when most boys cling fondly to tin soldiers and wooden guns—young Riesenfeld took up the study of the violin. His genius for this instrument soon convinced his parents that he was destined for a career of art, so he was placed in the Vienna Academy of Music, from which conservatory he was graduated at the age of seventeen, a finished student of the violin, piano and composition. Later he took a course at the University of Vienna.

Gustav Mahler, at that time director of the Vienna Opera House, was among those who early recognized the capabilities of young Riesenfeld. Mahler attended a musicale in which Mr. Riesenfeld participated and forthwith engaged him for the Vienna Opera House as first violinist and conductor of the ballet. During this engagement Mr. Riesenfeld composed a ballet entitled "Chopin's Dancing," which was performed and warmly acclaimed in Vienna.

In the spring of 1907 he was engaged by Oscar Hammerstein to come to New York as concert master of his orchestra at the Manhattan Opera House. Mr. Riesenfeld, aglow with the fire of ambition, entered upon his American career with the self-possession and determination of one who has found the realization of a cherished hope. As concert master of the Manhattan Opera House Mr. Riesenfeld's creative genius again scored, and soon after the closing of the Hammerstein venture he was engaged by Klaw & Erlanger as a conductor of one of their musical companies. Later when the Rialto was opened he became the musical director. Mr. Riesenfeld also took charge of affairs musical at the Rivoli, continuing his splendid work until his appointment as director of all phases of entertainment offered by both the Rialto and Rivoli Theaters.

Mr. Riesenfeld sees in the future of motion pictures just what he visualized in the development of art. He sees expansion and endless achievement through the periscope of an eye and mind that are trained on the elevating and idealistic. Mr. Riesenfeld regards the screen first as a wonderful educational factor, a medium through which vision is to be broadened, culture advanced, and learning simplified—a great mirror that will reflect the spiritual and material wealth of the world.—Advertisement.

MARIO SALVINI

A capable business man avoids all roads save that which leads straight to the goal. It should be the same with the teacher whose aim is to produce the best results with the material provided. Any endeavor to falsify means ultimate failure and "satisfaction" is a label not to be found on substitutes. Good results are accomplished only by instructors who employ proper means for the development of natural gifts. The art of teaching singing, of directing and developing the vocal organ, is a very difficult one and only experience and knowledge can be relied upon. Mario Salvini has rigorously pursued his vocation according to the high principles which he has adopted from his far-reaching success as a vocal master and builder of artistic careers.

WYONETA LA VERN CLEVELAND

Unusual success has attended the pianistic efforts of Wyoneta Cleveland, from Crawfordsville, Ind., from the classes of Rudolph Reuter at the Chicago Musical College. Her appearances at the Saturday morning programs of that institution, for the Renaissance Club of Chicago, and finally with a portion of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra at the college's commencement proved her a young artist of the highest attainments and marked individuality. In addition to the highest honor in her class, the diamond medal, she won first place in the competition for the best playing of Chopin, and was awarded the Dr. S. Solomon medal. Dr. Solomon further proved his generosity by the gift of a very substantial musical library.

"SONGS OF ARMENIA"

(Publishers: The Gotchnay Publishing Company, Inc., New York.)

Something different has come to print, and "Songs of Armenia," edited by G. H. Paelian and arranged by K. H. Aiquoni, are now available for the singer.

The Armenians are, unfortunately, a nation of martyrs, rendered so by the most brutal of all the races, the Mohammedans. We have made and are still making efforts to alleviate their sufferings of war and peace. Let us sing their songs, "The Homeless" and others, and then we may be able to appreciate better the degree of lamentation emanating from these unfortunate Christians. I went through the volume of songs and noted many a worthy passage for the recitalist—and something of a decidedly novel character. The intelligent program maker could convey these folk songs to audiences eager to listen to something very seldom heard in the concert hall. We have featured popular songs of all the races; why not those of Armenia? Let us know them, not only by their sorrows and tragedies, but by the means of their songs. In the book of Armenian songs, besides the compositions of Aiquoni, you will find some by Mr. E. Harold Geer, Kornitas Vartabed, N. Beg Amir-Khan, the Rev. S. K. Emurian, and the Rev. G. M. Manavian. They are excellent English translations and an abundant number of compositions from which to make choice.

PASSING COMMENT

The editor of Music News is spending this week at the great American Music Festival at Lockport, N. Y., and if you have read the programs and the advance notices you will be very sure that there is plenty for him to do and to hear.

Full report of this big week will appear later in Music News, and also the address, "What Now," which was given by him on Tuesday morning before the Festival audience.

Without knowing at all the reasons which led up to the decision not to have any dancing at Ravinia this year, we yet wish to offer sincere congratulations to the management and to express our belief that the change from last year has been a decidedly fine one and popular with most patrons of the park.

It has always seemed absolutely incongruous and certainly a matter of scant pleasure to a very small percentage of those who go to Ravinia to have a noisy jazz band playing in the dancing pavilion during the intermission between the acts of grand opera, and surely the few who have cared for this can find plenty of other places in which to indulge their liking other than Ravinia, where the music should always, consistently, be of high grade and where dancing is a superfluity.

A young Chicago singer has written a letter to an Eastern music journal, in which he advocates that all artists raise their fees very materially, "For," he says, "if we do not do that we admit that we were conscienceless profiteers before the war, inasmuch as prices of everything just now are so much higher than then that we cannot possibly live on the same we did then."

In theory this sounds very reasonable, but in practice it will not work out well.

It is merely adding another link to that endless chain of increased prices which does not help anyone at all, for the reason that each new advance swallows up all the advantage that has been gained in some other advance.

And, just as sure as day follows night, there is bound to be a break somewhere sooner or later, and some workers will certainly suffer when it comes.

The question is, then: Is it absolutely necessary or is it wise to make greatly increased demands for musical services?

Every thinking musician must answer: No. How, then, can the musician cope with the increased cost of living, and how can he hope to make any more money than during war times?

He must learn many business lessons and apply them to his profession.

Conservation of resources—careful following up of advantages—reasonable economy—must all be considered as well as all possible means for healthful expansion.

The musician must learn, if never before, to insist upon sure contracts, prompt payment for services and just treatment all around.

And he must learn, above everything else, not to fritter away his business opportunities.

When the cost of clothes and of car fare and of taxi hire and of food are so great as now, he must think, as he never did before, of the foolishness of giving his time and his services for nothing.

He must learn to answer the statement: "If you will sing for this club this time for nothing, you will get many other engagements out of it," by the counter-statement, "Yes, but meantime I must eat and dress and ride, and if you want me to sing for you today you must provide the wherewithal to buy those things I must have today!"

Musicians do not need to ask greatly increased prices just now half so much as they need to learn to deal promptly and firmly with that part of the public which asks them to give of their musical wares for nothing.

One doesn't learn much while talking, which may explain why some people know so little.

After living in New York for ten years and making a lot of money there, Victor Maurel had the following pleasant things to say about Americans in a Musical Monitor interview on the eve of sailing for his native France.

However, his points about English opera are well taken and are worthy of all consideration.

"Long years ago," said he, "in London, I gave a recital just to prove that English songs, if rightly sung, were quite as musical as lieder or canzoni. The critics who attended my performance went to scoff—and they remained to praise. And this, although I sang my airs by rote, for I knew little or no English.

"Opera could be interpreted in English. Nor could I see why foreign artists should not be able or obliged to use your language. So much for theory. Then why, you may inquire, is not the theory translated into fact? That is the point. Mon cher ami, the fact is that Americans who take to opera are hampered by two most distressing faults. With rare exceptions they know nothing about diction, enunciation, articulation. They are under the impression that the only essential of dramatic

CARRIE MUNGER LONG

Carrie Munger Long, teacher of the Dunning System of Improved Music Study, has completed arrangements to teach during the coming seasons in the MacBurney Studios in the Fine Arts Building.

On October 1st she will open a class which will extend over three months of time, the plan being to have two lessons a week only, in order that students may pursue interpretative study at the same time.

Another class will begin on the same date which will cover the course in five weeks, taking a lesson every day.

CLARENCE EDDY RECITALS AT TOPEKA AND ELSEWHERE

The date of the organ recital by Clarence Eddy at the Auditorium in Topeka, Kan., is Sunday evening, September 7, and not the 8th, as stated in these columns last week.

This is to be followed by an opening organ recital at the Kountze Memorial Lutheran Church in Omaha on the 11th and a recital at the First Baptist Church at Sioux City, Iowa, on the 12th.

RETURN OF VIOLA COLE-AUDET TO CHICAGO

Viola Cole-Audet has returned to Chicago after a year spent in Montreal and New York City, and has opened a new studio at 426 Fine Arts Building.

Mme. Cole-Audet is a very successful teacher of piano, and her decision to return to Chicago instead of locating permanently in New York, was made because of the constant insistence of many of her old pupils that she again enter the teaching field in this city.

FRANCES PAPERT RETURNS TO CHICAGO

During this time she appeared also in song recital before many of the leading music clubs of the South.

Miss Papert sang in opera almost daily throughout the entire trip, and appeared in many parts.

Her pronounced success has already been noted, and further press comments, which will appear in our columns later, will show more fully still the extent of her work and successes.

CHICAGO OPERA ASSOCIATION

The Chicago Opera Association announces that most of the conducting next season will be done by Gino Marinuzzi, who is heralded as one of Italy's greatest musicians, and whose new opera, "Jacquerie," will be produced here. Maestro Campanini will, as usual, conduct a few operas, but the burden of the work will fall on his new conductor. Mr. Marinuzzi has conducted in the greatest opera houses in Italy, such as La Scala, Constanzi and San Carlo, as well as the Teatro Reale of Madrid, the Opera Comique of Paris and for two seasons at the Colon of Buenos Aires. In Chicago he will conduct both French and Italian works, and he will have as his associates Louis Hasselmans and Marcel Charlier.

Mr. Marinuzzi was born at Palermo on March 24, 1884. He received his musical education at the Conservatory in Bologna, the great educational center of Italy. He graduated while still in his teens, and immediately won a place in the opera world as a conductor. His success has been overwhelming, and the praises showered upon him have been equal to those bestowed upon Arturo Toscanini. He is a great student, and, like Toscanini, has a great memory and conducts all his operas from memory. He has had equal success with both the modern and the classic operatic repertoire. His readings of Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde" and "Parsifal" have been equaled by his renditions of Rossini's "Barber of Seville" and Verdi's "Rigoletto."

His visit to Chicago will have special significance in that his latest work, "Jacquerie," will be presented under his personal direction. This opera had its initial performance in Buenos Aires last year and received an enthusiastic reception on its presentation at the Teatro Constanzi of Rome.

He is also widely known as a composer of symphonic works, the most noted among the latter being the poems "Sicania," "Suite Sicilienne," "Andantino all 'Antica," "Eulogy," dedicated to the heroes of the recent war, and "La Sinfonia di Pinnocchio."

For two years he was at the head of the famous Liceo of Bologna, but found himself unable to resist for a longer period the call of greater fields.

Her home had been in Muskogee, Okla., for some sixteen years, where she was much admired for her brilliant talents along musical lines, and where she had been president of the Ladies' Saturday Music Club for four years (the oldest music club in the state); also of the New Century Club, Shakespeare Club, and various other leading organizations, besides being a member of the Music Study and Choral Clubs and having the responsibility of several state and national committees and much Red Cross work.

ARTHUR GRANQUIST

ARTHUR GRANQUIST TO OPEN NEW STUDIO IN THE FINE ARTS BUILDING

Arthur Granquist, a very popular Chicago pianist and a teacher whose prestige is at the very highest point, is opening his new studio at 610 Fine Arts Building this week.

Mr. Granquist is one of the most talented as well as best prepared of the younger pianists of the country, and his work in Chicago has given him a reputation of the very finest and most comprehensive sort.

He is a pianist of power, imagination and polish, and his success in teaching has been in a like proportion to his gifts and his education.

Blessed also with a sincere and charming personality, as well as the best sort of intelligence and musical feeling, the success of Arthur Granquist in his new studio is a foregone conclusion.

OLIVE NEVIN WITH THE STADIUM SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

BY HERSELF

I once asked a golf fiend what on earth the fascination was in the game, and he said: "Well, there isn't much fun in it until you make your first good, smashing hit and see the little white ball disappear in the distance. Then, if it takes the rest of your life to do it, you have to make another."

That is very much the way I feel about my late appearance with the Stadium Orchestra in New York—if it takes the rest of my life, I want another such experience in my career as a "song fiend."

I have stood in the center of the Greek Theater in Berkeley, Calif., when it was crowded with enthusiastic students, and I have seen the Harvard Stadium so, and I have stood in the great Colosseum at Rome in the moonlight, crowded with its living memories of pomp and gorgeousness, but not at all in the same capacity, but I shall never forget the sight of that big Stadium in New York, every seat taken, as I stood in the midst of it all.

I was very nervous before Mr. Volpe came for me. I felt such an atom out under the stars, before that vast, rustling throng, and one short aria seemed so little to convince them all that my years of hard, patient study, thought, experience and effort had been worth while. However, when I got up to sing, the great wonder of it all overwhelmed me. I drew in my breath as if from the stars above and thrilled at the beauty all around me before I told Mr. Volpe to start the introduction. Then I forgot everything else, even those who wear the purple in our profession, the critics who scratch down on a piece of paper the impressions they receive, the written word that is the veritable thumbs down or up of the old Roman Colosseum day to the artist. Nothing much mattered to me, after all. There was only the infinity of space to fill, and there seemed to be infinite voice entirely outside myself to fill it, and the great simplicity and beauty of Mozart's music, which in the mind of the composer must have been far more wonderful even than the written score.

Yes, if it takes the rest of my life, I have to make another such appearance.

A "CLOSE-UP" STUDY OF AN AMERICAN COMPOSER WHO MADE GOOD

It is now somewhat over fifteen years since the name of W. Rhys-Herbert first commenced to figure prominently as a composer and arranger. Far removed from our mind, when saying this, to convey the impression that this now well-known personage was then just out of his teens or had just arrived on these shores from the Land of Song—Wales—where his cradle stood and where first he was taught to sing "The Men of Harlech" (naturally from a solfa copy). Heaven forbid, no! William Rhys-Herbert admits that he was born as far back as 1868, on October 3d, in Resolven. Furthermore, that several of the tutors responsible for his musical education were Dr. E. J. Lorenz (Leipzig), Dr. Frederick J. Karn (London) and J. J. Davies (Pittsburgh). While giving his pedigree we must not overlook also to mention that William Rhys-Herbert took his degrees of Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. at Trinity University, Toronto, and, after spending a few years, studying and observing, in cities in Pennsylvania and Kansas, he finally settled down in Minnesota, first in St. Paul and later on in Minneapolis. In order to convince Dr. Rhys-Herbert that a better field for his activities exists elsewhere, some rather strong persuasive power and argument must be called into play, for the congenial Doctor is a rooter for his home town first, last and all the time.

Through the kind offices of Ray K. Armstrong, in those days manager of the sheet music department of W. J. Dyer & Bro., St. Paul, W. Rhys-Herbert, in 1904, first met George Fischer of the house of J. Fischer & Bro., New York, while Mr. Fischer was looking after business interests in the Twin Cities. This proved the beginning of a friendly relation between composer and publisher which was never interrupted, even for a moment. Preparatory to signing up with J. Fischer & Bro., New York, Rhys-Herbert placed several works for publication with local (Twin City) firms, with the result that his abilities as a creative musician immediately attracted attention. It was correctly assumed that the services of an active and wideawake house having foreign connections would be required in order to find the proper outlet and channel for the compositions Dr. Rhys-Herbert then already had in mind writing. Therefore, since the days of 1904, the name of J. Fischer & Bro. graces the title pages of all of his, at all rates, important compositions.

After first bringing out a splendid set of part-song arrangements from the pen of W. Rhys-Herbert for male, women and mixed voices, the manuscript of the operetta, "Sylvia," was presented for consideration. What the fate of this excellent little operetta has been everyone conversant with this particular line of composition knows. It has stood the test of time well and, according to the word of the publishers, is, if anything, more popular today than it was when first printed.

The operettas of Dr. W. Rhys-Herbert, seven in number, have given new distinction to a field—that of amateur musical dramatics for adults—which was long restricted to a few works of Sullivan's. They have much of the musical charm associated with Sir Arthur Sullivan's score, and their libretti are full of natural Gilbertian humor. And, above all, they supply an element of novelty—the fresher interest that is always in demand, both in music and drama, and which cannot be supplied by a scant repertory of one or two older works, no matter how meritorious they may be. Amateur dramatic societies, high schools, colleges, choral clubs, and church societies have found wide scope for successful entertainment in these two-act operettas, in which clever dialogue and charming solo and chorus numbers develop the stories, and which at the same time do not make too ambitious demands as regards music, costumes or scenery.

Yet the operatic field is not the only one in which Dr. W. Rhys-Herbert has made a name for himself. In his sacred cantatas, the more serious and devotional trend of his creative power has been given rich and beautiful utterance. The cantatas, all for mixed voices, are four in number: "Bethany," "The Nazarene," "Bethlehem" and "The Christ-Child." Of these, "Bethany" will soon be published in an arrangement for women's voices.

Too numerous to mention here are the songs, both sacred and secular, from the pen of W. Rhys-Herbert. It, however, remained for "Star Divine" to be singled out on several occasions for festivals where competitive singing was the order of the day.

Dr. W. Rhys-Herbert always boasted of a warm spot in his heart for the kiddies, a fact which he showed in the numerous unison choruses, easy part-songs, not to speak of the many juvenile cantatas he wrote for them. His "In a Flower Garden," "Brownies' Whispers," and the several others published under the nom de plume of S. T. Paul will bear out the writer's contention that he gave the best that was within him when writing for the youngsters.

As a man, Dr. Rhys-Herbert is modesty personified. With a broad appreciation of the good work done by others, he is inclined to deprecate his own, a fact that only emphasizes the success he has won as a composer. Personal magnetism and a keen but kindly sense of humor—the latter often developed in the modest and unpretentious type of mind—have helped to secure for Dr. Rhys-Herbert a multitude of friends.

Yet the composer himself can only directly influence those with whom he comes in immediate contact. It is only thru his compositions that he gains a land-wide and —as in the case of Dr. Rhys-Herbert—an international reputation, and that his personality, through their medium, makes friends for him by the thousand, in place of by the score. Herein lies the explanation of the phrase used not so long ago, describing Dr. Rhys-Herbert as "an immutable and powerful influence for artistic betterment." For his compositions, in the various fields to which he has turned his attention, have achieved that permanent success which is the best and mose satisfactory guarantee, both to the composer and the public in general, of good work well done.

Not only as a composer has Dr. Rhys-Herbert won laurels, but also has he endeared himself to all who know him as an adjudicator, organist, accompanist, and last, but not least, as conductor of choral and glee clubs. The noble work done by him with the Elks' Glee Club of Minneapolis during the period of the war has not remained unnoticed, and it is not only his select body of singers who are ever grateful to him, but also the thousands of our boys in camp, who were cheered by the men under the direction of the Doctor, all of whom gave the best they knew how when responding to each and every patriotic call. The fame of the Elks' Glee Club spread way beyond the boundaries of the State of Minnesota, and it was due only to general conditions in 1918 that his boys, as the Doctor delights to refer to his Glee Club, were prevented from touring the East.

After reading the above, one might be led to ask: Is there anything else the Doc is "hep" in? Well—we'll squeal on him, even at the risk of getting a mild calling down for doing so. While the opera season is on at Ravinia Park, Rhys-Herbert finds a hankering in his heart to go down to Chi. Oh, yes, you might find him attending a performance, but you positively will see him wending his way towards the ball grounds, with pockets full of stogies, of the West Virginia brand. (They are all right, since we've smoked some of the Doc's.) In close decisions, and where these happen to be contrary to the views of the Mus. Doc., all the eloquence that is in Rhys-Herbert oozes out. Where the English tongue fails him, he resorts to the Welsh, of which he displays a wonderful vocabulary.

Dr. W. Rhys-Herbert without a weed in his mouth is unimaginable; the writer therefore begs leave to remark that the halftone cut on the front page of the present issue of Music News, while it represents a splendid specimen of the possibilities of photographic art, in this particular, however is not true to life. In other words, the Doctor must have posed for it while in an ecclesiastical edifice.

singing is 'tone.' Besides this they appear to have no temperament. During my stay here I have had two thousand pupils. Some have come to me for the sake of amusement they expected to get from my lessons. Others have had more serious notions. You may wonder when I tell you that, of those two thousand, not one—not one, I say—had temperamental qualities.

"As to their diction—their articulation—it was terrible, almost always. They treated consonants as though they were negligible, both at the beginning and the end of the words they sang."

The following sentences of "Advice to Young Men" by Andrew Carnegie are well worth reading by everybody:

He must live within his income, regardless of how small it is.

He must not be content with doing only that which is required of him.

He must always do a little more than his duty calls for.

Don't drink.

Don't smoke.

Obey all the rules; don't try to tell the boss you know it all.

He must marry young. Make not heaven the home, but home the heaven.

He should not be opposed to marrying a millionaire's daughter because he is poor; many a poor man has married the daughter of a rich man and found happiness.

He should have $25 a week when he is married; more is not necessary.

Music News is in receipt of the subjoined letter, which is certainly well worth consideration.

Mrs. Edwards is right in her contention, and it is true that the vast majority of American singers need to study pronunciation of English text, as also the subject of English enunciation in general:

Music News: In your editorial of last week's Music News under the heading "Passing Comment," you state that we (Americans) allow them (speaking of foreigners) "to simply murder the English language."

I beg respectfully to call your attention to the fact that we allow the Americans also to murder the English language, in song, on the stage, in everyday life. Why then should we discriminate against foreigners? There may be some excuse for the latter, but it is actually criminal on the part of the Americans, in the opinion of

MINNIE HUDD TRELOAR

Mrs. Minnie Hudd-Treloar, who is spending a very much needed rest up in the pines of Northern Minnesota, happened to be in Duluth when the funeral of Lieut. William P. Hammel was held last Saturday. She sang Homer's "Requiem," and at the end of the service, "Taps!" Lieutenant Hammel was a graduate of Duluth Central High School and was president of his class. He attended the second officers' training camp at Fort Monroe and was commissioned in the Coast Artillery. He was electrocuted almost instantly at Ironwood, August 20, when attempting to rescue a workman under his charge at the Puritan mine, near Ironwood. Lieutenant Hammel was working with the two men upon a transformer which was surrounded by a barbed wire enclosure. The men were within the enclosure when the switch was closed. The ground for twenty feet was charged with 33,000 volts and the men at the transformer were rendered helpless. Lieutenant Hammel rushed to the workman's aid, who was clinging to the wire of the enclosure, and succeeded in rescuing him, but was killed almost instantly himself by his foot coming in contact with a live wire.

Cameo Salon—The Cameo Salon, with Elizabeth Guion Dormer as president, will be a new factor in the music life of Chicago the coming season. There will be monthly meetings at the rooms at 1142 Michigan avenue. This salon has been organized as a rendezvous for devotees of Music, Prose, Drama, Poetry, Painting Sculpture, Philosophy and Higher Spiritual Thought.

MR. AND MRS. HAROLD B. MARYOTT

Mr. and Mrs. Harold B. Maryott are spending their vacation at Tabor Farm, Mich. The week before their departure Mr. Maryott spent three evenings at Great Lakes Naval Station. Twice he gave his illustrated lecture on popular astronomy for the Y. M. C. A., and on another evening he and Mrs. Maryott, with a ladies' quartet, gave a musical program. The quartet consisted of Mrs. O. H. Runyan, Mrs. Robertina Robertson, Mrs. T. R. Toohey, and Miss Orma Leonard.

The party were entertained at supper at the hostess' house and then conveyed by automobile to the Radio Station, where they gave a concert of fifty minutes' length, after which they were whisked away again to the Aviation Headquarters, a distance of a mile or so, and repeated the same program to an enthusiastic audience of young would-be flyers.

A COMING SERIES OF CONCERTS

The Central Concert Company, the general music purveying enterprise which is entering the Chicago field with a series of eight evening joint recitals in Medinah Temple, will make its local debut a little more than a month hence—Thursday evening, October 9. The artists to be presented at the opening recital are Riccardo Stracciari and Miss Rosa Ponselle.

For the past two months the Central Concert Company has been conducting an intensive campaign from its office at 931 Marshall Field Building, and has succeeded admirably in acquainting Chicagoans with its plans for the season. Mr. W. H. C. Burnett of Detroit, president of the company, asserts that neither labor nor expense will be spared in an effort to present to the Chicago public a series of eight impressionable and entertaining "musical evenings."

"It is the intention primarily to offer musical entertainment to the general public," he declared earnestly, "and we consider our work a serious and decidedly worthwhile mission. Without departing for an instant from the highest artistic standards, we intend to present artists who are pleasing and interesting to all, and to offer programs that our patrons will enjoy whether or not they are musically proficient. Every effort will be made to present each concert in as satisfying and meritorious manner as possible, and we will endeavor also to provide a variety which will do away with any possibility of weariness or monotony. Our great aim is to satisfy Chicagoans and justify the faith of the people who are already extending their patronage and assuring us of their friendship and good wishes.

The Central Concert Company attractions for the season are as follows:

October 9—Riccardo Stracciari and Rosa Ponselle.

October 22—Giovanni Martinelli and Toscha Seidel.

November 11—Anna Case and Maud Powell.

November 25—Margaret Matzenauer and Max Rosen.

January 8—Mischa Levitzki and Marguerite Namara.

January 20—Florence Macbeth, Sascha Jacobson, and Theo Karle.

February 5—Louis Graveure and Julia Culp.

February 25—Artists to be announced later.

Music at RAVINIA PARK

CLOSE OF THE RAVINIA SEASON

The most successful season ever known at Ravinia has come to a close, and everyone connected with it is subject for sincere applause.

Never has there been so good a company of singers, never has the chorus, the orchestra and the stage management been so perfect, and never has the management of the park and of the opera been so effective.

For these last two items special thanks are due A. M. Lowrie, whose efficiency has throughout the season made for the pleasure and the comfort of Ravinia guests, and to Louis Eckstein, who has proved himself a man of vision and the best sort of artistic impulse, as well as one of keen business judgment in the selection of artists and operas and in the presenting of them.

The selection of operas has been varied enough to suit all tastes, and some of the standard works have been given at a surprising degree of excellence, while there was spectacular joy in the presentation of "The Elixir of Love" and dramatic thrill in that of "L'Oracolo," both of these being operas entirely new to this public.

As stated in Music News repeatedly, the work of Florence Easton throughout the season has been at a remarkable point of style and finish.

This fine singer has appeared in a wide variety and a long list of parts, and has triumphed in every one of them.

Alice Gentle—a newcomer—has proven herself a splendid acquisition, and has been fine in every one of the long list of parts which have been assigned her. Especially striking has been her delineations of Santuzza and Suzuki.

The lighter feminine parts have been in the safe care of Edith Mason and Mabel Garrison, each of whom has her own large circle of admirers, and small parts in every opera have been intelligently done by Philine Falco.

Of the tenors Morgan Kingston has gone far past all the others in beauty of voice and in splendor of acting and he has—truly, made himself the supreme favorite at Ravinia.

Thomas Chalmers, Millo Picco, and Louis D'Angelo have constituted a fine list of baritones and have all done splendidly—some of the interpretations of Picco, for instance, having been distinctly notable and D'Angelo having been found adequate to every situation in which he has been placed.

Leon Rothier, the lone basso of the company, has a good voice and is, besides, a consummate artist, his work in "L'Oracolo," for instance, pressing hard upon the fame of Scotti for first place in attention.

Mr. Scotti, as a guest artist, showed a diminution in singing ability, but proved himself still a fine dramatic artist and also showed beyond any question that he is still a supreme favorite with the public.

The concerts of the season have been continuous and fine, the repertoire has been practically limitless, and the conducting, mostly under the expert and artistic baton of Richard Hageman, has been intelligent, artistic and sparkling.

Gennaro Papi has conducted most of the operas, and he has again acquitted himself in a way to prove his routine, his knowledge of repertoire and his general artistic feeling.

"La Boheme"

On Friday evening last there was an enormous throng of people at Ravinia, probably as many as have ever attended any one performance, the magnet being "La Boheme," with Scotti as Marcel, in which he has long been famous but in which he has been practically unknown in Chicago.

Miss Easton was again the Mimi in looks, action, dress, and, above all, in the exquisite quality of her vocal work.

Mr. Kingston, in the finest of condition, poured forth a flood of absolute vocal delight and again proved himself a thoroughly worthy exponent of the part of Rudolph, in the dramatic sense.

Rothier, D'Angelo and Daddi again did their accustomed parts with skill, and the other roles of the opera were satisfactorily filled.

Closing Night at Ravinia Park

The final night of the season's opera at Ravinia drew one of the largest audiences Ravinia has ever enjoyed. Scotti, Easton and Rothier repeated their former reviewed successes in "L'Oracolo." One act of "Pagliacci" followed and was thoroughly enjoyed. Mr. Kingston was brilliant in his singing and acting as Canio, Miss Easton was the charming Nedda, and Scotti was a wide-awake Tonio.

As to Our Directory Columns

The name of every Musician in the United States—every Composer, every Manager, every Publisher, every Teacher, every School, and every Manufacturer of Music Instruments, should be in the Classified Directory Columns of THE MUSIC NEWS.

It is a fact today that Managers, Directors of Schools, Program Committees, Festival Directors, Lyceum Promoters—in fact, everybody who has to do with Musicians, has formed the habit, when the address of a Musician is wanted, of looking in our Directory Columns for it.

We have been told again and again,

"Your Directory Is the Most Useful List Published in the United States"

Even if you have no intention of doing more public work—even though you are located where no change seems possible—it is still advisable to have your name in our columns in order that your friends, the managers, the publishers and the public at large may have a ready means of finding your address.

And—if you ARE in the field for increased engagements or activities of any kind you will find no medium so useful as this.

We have Classifications for every Instrument, for the Voice, for Publishers, Manufacturers, Composers, Directors, Ensembles, Theory Teachers, Dancing, Dramatic Art, Clubs, Choir Boy Training, Pageantry, Community Singing Directors, Managers, Accompanists, Public School Music Teachers, and others.

If we have not your Classification we will create a Department for you.

The cost of this service is only fifteen dollars a year, but the service itself is invaluable.

During the last season we carried in the Classified Columns hundreds of names. We want to carry additional hundreds this season, and expect to make the list as near complete as we possibly can.

Payment for this service can be made Annually, Semi-Annually or Quarterly—and, as we send THE MUSIC NEWS to each one whose name is in these columns, you need have no further expense for subscription.

Display Advertising in MUSIC NEWS is considered today the most useful in America, and you will—eventually—be in the field for that. But, meantime, you should not delay one week in having your name in our Classified Directory Columns, for this is AN INVALUABLE SERVICE.

J. EDWIN PETERSON

J. Edwin Peterson has resigned his position as musical director of the Fourth Congregational Church, which he has held for six and one-half years, to build up the choirs of the Campbell Park Presbyterian Church, located at Harrison and Leavitt streets. The Fourth Congregational Church has appointed him as one of a committee to receive applications for the position which he is vacating, and there is an opportunity for a young director to work with a fine choir.

CARLETON H. BULLIS

Carleton H. Bullis, who has been organist at the Mandarin Inn, Chicago, since the opening of the new place last April, has resigned his position to become connected with the faculty of Lawrence College Conservatory, Appleton, Wis., as professor of organ and theory. His new duties begin with the opening of the school year, about the middle of September.

In making this change, Mr. Bullis returns to educational work, for some years ago he was college organist and head of the organ and theory department at Albion College, Albion, Mich., and more recently instructor of music theory in the Milwaukee State Normal School.

The newly installed four-manual Steere organ at the Lawrence College chapel will provide Mr. Bullis with one of the most desirable concert instruments in the country. In addition to the organ work, he will take charge of the classes in harmony, counterpoint and music history.

Mr. Bullis is a former pupil of W. Middleschulte in organ, and the major part of his theoretical studies were pursued under P. C. Lutkin and Arne Oldberg at the Northwestern University School of Music.

He is a graduate of the College of Liberal Arts, Northwestern University, and has done some graduate study in the Department of Psychology at the State University of Iowa.

He is an Associate of the American Guild of Organists.

From among Mr. Bullis' compositions, a "Novelette," for organ, has recently appeared from the press of the H. W. Gray Co.

MORGAN KINGSTON

Morgan Kingston, the Metropolitan tenor, celebrated his return from Ravinia Park, Chicago, with a concert at Asbury Park, N. J., on Thursday, September 4. Mr. Kingston will appear later in the month at Scranton, Pa.

CLARENCE EDDY

The name of Clarence Eddy is known throughout the musical world. He is recognized by the best authorities as one of the world's greatest organists, and his reputation extends from ocean to ocean. His teacher, August Haupt, the master organist of Germany, declared that "In organ playing the performances of Mr. Eddy are worthy to be designated as eminent, and he is undoubtedly a peer of the greatest living organists."

After a concert given by Mr. Eddy at the Paris Exposition of 1889, Alexandre Guilmant, the most famous French organist, paid him the following tribute: "Mr. Eddy's great virtuosity and his masterly interpretations elicited the warmest applause. We were astonished at the ease with which he was able to control the magnificent instrument of Cavaille-Coll, knowing that he had had barely a few hours in which to familiarize himself with all its resources. Mr. Eddy is a great artist, and he has won the esteem of French organists. For ourselves, we are happy to extend to him our sincerest congratulations."

Following a recital given at the famous Saint Cecilia Academy in Rome, Mr. Eddy was made an honorary member, and among the encomiums he received was the following expression from the great composer, Sgambati: "He is one of the greatest organists of the present epoch."

Mr. Eddy was born in Greenfield, Mass., and began studying the pianoforte under Laura J. Billings at the age of eleven. His first lessons on the organ were from J. Gilbert Wilson, two years later, after which he studied a year under Dudley Buck in Hartford, Conn.

He was for two years organist of Bethany Church, at Montpelier, Vt., and then went to Berlin, where he studied the organ and composition under August Haupt, and the piano under Albert Loeschhorn.

After a highly successful concert-tour in Germany, Austria, Switzerland and Holland, Mr. Eddy returned to this country and located in Chicago, where he became organist of the First Congregational Church for two years, and later of the First Presbyterian Church for seventeen years. In Chicago he gave upwards of four hundred recitals, including a series of one hundred programs without a single repetition. This made him famous, and his reputation rapidly grew by reason of his numerous recitals all over the country, as he was called upon to dedicate new organs in nearly every State in the Union. He has probably opened more new organs than any other living organist.

Mr. Eddy has been identified officially with every important exposition since the one at Vienna in 1873, namely, those at Philadelphia in 1876, Paris in 1889, Chicago in 1893, with twenty-one recitals; Buffalo in 1901, St. Louis in 1904, Jamestown in 1907, with six recitals, and San Francisco in 1915, with over forty recitals.

Mr. Eddy's repertoire comprises practically everything written for the organ, as well as hundreds of manuscripts which have been dedicated to him. His four Organ Collections, published by Edward Schuberth & Co. of New York, and one by the Oliver Ditson Company of Boston, are extensively used throughout the United States, while his "Method for the Organ," in two volumes, just published by the John Church Company of Cincinnati, will shortly be followed by "Standard Compositions for the Organ," in two volumes, with special interpretative annotations.

NEW YORK STUDIO OF MARIO SALVINI

SALVINI, EMINENT VOCAL INSTRUCTOR

The distinguished vocal instructor and diagnostician of New York City, Mario Salvini, frequently is consulted by professional singers regarding the condition of the vocal organs and closely associated topics. Among these inquirers are those from various parts of the world who have ascertained from Signor Salvini whether or not their methods of producing the voice were correct. He asserts: "In no profession does such confusion exist as in the vocal art." He deals with this interesting and profound subject with authority, for he has delved into it deeply, and states further: "Nature produces beautiful voices, but they require perfect training and development. The throat is the most subtle instrument known, therefore it demands careful treatment." Among artists who in this respect have gained special benefit from him, and speak in high terms of his exceptional ability as a teacher, is Amelia Potts, at present at her spacious and charming home in Wales, Great Britain.

Signor Salvini, believing in exercise and fresh air, is an admirable horseman, and has been seen this summer riding at the favorite resort, Edgemere, Long Island, where he has a Summer School of Singing. At Far Rockaway, lately, he was instrumental in giving first aid to the Countess de Chevigny, who was thrown from her horse.

He believes that proper breathing has much to do with correct singing, and that the beauties and other riches of Nature add their influence in the general development of art and creative power.

Socially, Signor Salvini is a gentleman of rare gifts, which are enhanced by the fact that he is familiar with no less than ten languages. He has traveled far, read much and is delightfully conversant with the topics of the times. In the professional world, "Straight to the goal" evidently is one of his mottoes. A capable business man avoids all paths except those which lead to the desired haven. It should be the same with the instructor, whose aim is to produce the best possible results. Mario Salvini has ardently followed his vocation in accordance with the high artistic principles which he has accepted in his brilliant career, and upon them his far-reaching success as a vocal master and psychologically sympathetic instructor is enthusiastically founded.

LYRAVINE VOTAW

Lyravine Votaw mingles play and work by spending three weeks in delightful little cities of Indiana and Illinois instructing in teachers' institutes.

She will return to the city September 9 ready for the season of teaching, which promises to be a very busy one.

Miss Votaw is teacher of singing and school music in the Dearborn School of Lyceum Arts. She has moved from the Auditorium Building, where she has been for several years, to Suite 614 Fine Arts Building, where she will receive her pupils after September 10. Her class instruction is concise, thorough and unique. She is recognized as an authority on school music, and her class in theory for singers is exceedingly useful to every singer, whether artist or student.

As dean of the Dearborn School Miss Votaw invites all her friends to their new quarters.

Simplicity in Singing

A SERIES OF PRACTICAL ARTICLES

By ELIZABETH FORESMAN BAGG

(Copyright 1919 by Mary Elizabeth Bagg)

PART IX

Background

One of the things which strike an older person most forcibly when considering the problems of the ordinary youngster, either in music or in any other art, is the pitiful lack in her equipment of what we sometimes call "background." By background, of late rather a hackneyed term, we mean in this connection, preparation, either through association or through study, for the career toward which she is looking.

We often hear it said of the woman who by ability, aided by money, makes for herself a social position to which she was not born, "She has no background." In other words, she has not had in her youth the association with people and places, books and the arts, which make it easy and natural to be a cultured woman. She has had to acquire with effort the things which it is most desirable to absorb at an age when absorption is a natural and easy process.

So, in the career of the young singer, this background or unconscious preparation is a most desirable thing. This was recently illustrated to me very forcibly in the cases of two young girls, both with unusually good voices, both personally attractive, and both ambitious for operatic careers. One of them, she who had much the better voice of the two, came from a small country town and of a family who were neither musical nor artistic—nor even cultured. The girl had had the usual grammar and high school education, and what little musical training she had been able to pick up from an occasional teacher who had located in her town. She spoke with the twang which we have grown to associate with the rural districts, though why we should I don't know, as it is common enough in the cities. In short, she had everything to learn. She had the voice and that was practically all.

The other girl came from a family of artistically inclined people. Among her relatives were musicians, actors, painters, etc., none of them geniuses, but all of them working along the line of artistic effort. Her life had been passed in cities of Europe and America. She spoke three languages well. While I don't believe she had ever lived long enough in any one place to get a certified education, she had read, traveled and lived an education which gave her a marvelous background for her career. All that remained to be done was the voice work and the acquiring of the traditions of her profession. She was ten years ahead of the other girl at the start and through no virtue of her own.

Now, it is of course quite evident that all young singers cannot have the advantages with which this girl began; we do not choose our own environments, nor are we always fortunate enough to be able to change them to suit ourselves. I believe, however, that it is possible for parents, in many cases, to create a background for their children which will be extremely helpful to them in later life.

People often ask me at what age a girl should begin the study of vocal music, and I am never able to give them a definite answer for the reason that girls, as well as voices, differ greatly. Some girls and some voices develop earlier than others, and can be started earlier in the study. Take, for instance, the case of a girl with a phenomenal voice. She is constantly being asked to sing, from her very babyhood. It is impossible to keep her from singing, and therefore it is quite necessary that she be taught to sing correctly, even though she be under the age when we encourage girls to begin to study. As a rule, however, it is better for a girl to wait until she is seventeen or eighteen before she starts in to cultivate her voice. She has then both the physical and mental development necessary for the study, and she can by that time have finished the schooling which every artist should have.

Here is the parents' opportunity to give the girl her background, or, if you prefer it, her preparation for study. I would not go so far as to recommend the methods of the German professor who was so determined that his three boys should carry on the musical traditions of his house that he used to lock each boy, with his particular instrument, in his room for eight hours a day, though truth compels me to state that the system turned out three excellent musicians. What I would suggest is that between the ages of six and sixteen, which is usually the period spent in the grammar and high school, and girl or boy who shows any musical talent be given when possible a thorough grounding in instrumental music. early study of the piano, in particular, is invaluable to a singer. Apart from the fact that it enables her to accompany herself in her practice, and, if necessary, in public, it is a very satisfactory way of learning those rudiments of music—time, rhythm, sight reading, etc., the lack of which is absolutely unpardonable in a singer.

All of those things are easily learned by children and painfully acquired by adults, and, while they are taught in the public schools, it is only a superficial knowledge that can be obtained there owing to the size of the classes and the short time allotted to the study. You will find singers—good singers, some of them—who cannot read by sight; who have to have time pounded into them by a choirmaster or an accompanist, and probably no one but they themselves knows what a detriment this ignorance is to them in their work.

Parents who not only give their children the opportunity of becoming musically educated in the years of school going, but who are firm enough to insist upon it when the children are reluctant, are robbing the voice work of more advanced years of half its labors, as well as creating an atmosphere of culture which would be of great benefit even if the children never developed any further along musical lines. There is no doubt in my mind that a good piano education is one of the best assets that a singer can have.

Then comes the question of languages. Your daughter will need French, Italian, and German, as well as very excellent English, if she is to make any sort of success in her profession. The English we have spoken of in the last chapter. We all know how much easier it is to learn foreign languages in our school days than in later life. The children in our public schools have the opportunity of studying one or two languages to a limited degree. If that study could be supplemented by a more complete system outside the school, at about the high school period, let us say, it would be an excellent preparation for the musical education to come. If the reading knowledge of these languages, which the girl acquires in high school, could be assisted by outside study to become a conversational knowledge, how very helpful it would be to her if later on she elects to study in Paris, or to enter an opera company where her stage directions may be given her in any one of three foreign tongues.

Of course, I realize perfectly that the high school junior and senior are the hardest worked young people in existence, and that at the suggestion of outside study they will revolt at once, but is it not just as well that these young people should learn early in life that the existence of a public singer is not a bed of roses? By this time, too, the young girl may be able to drop her instrumental music if she really intends to make singing her life work and to concentrate on languages.

You see, I do not advocate her dropping her school work! I have seen so many cases of half-educated musicians, and so many other people who neglected to get an education because they were looking forward to a musical "career," and who failed to get the "career," that I cannot advise girls to stop short of the high school diploma if they can possibly avoid it. Of course, there are cases—the girl of whom I have just been speaking was one—where travel, reading, and association have furnished more than a high school equivalent, but these cases are not the rule. Get a good education in the years when Nature intended it to be acquired, and you will still have time for the work of your profession.

Without doubt many singers have succeeded in their careers with little education or mentality, but this state of things is becoming less and less possible. Modern opera is making greater and greater demands upon the mentality of the singer, and the same is true of other branches of the singing profession, and while genius expressed in a marvelous voice may override all our rules, we must remember that genius is very rare and that it is for the majority that our rules are made.

Let us say, then, that our future prima donna has arrived at the age of sixteen or seventeen, and is anxious to begin the study of vocal music. She has a good education, a grounding of instrumental music, a working knowledge of perhaps one or two languages besides her own, and, most important of all, a fresh, unharmed voice in a healthy body. The first question which arises is, where shall she study, here or abroad?

This question has long been a bone of contention, though during the last four years the war has forced an answer. The young person has been obliged to study here or not to study at all, and the business of getting the right teacher has been made even more complicated than usual by the vast influx of foreign teachers of all qualities. Looking at the subject honestly, and speaking from an experience both here and abroad, I say emphatically: Let her get her foundation, her voice placing and voice building, in this country. Afterward, if she wishes, let her go abroad for training in style and interpretation, and, if opera is her ambition, in dramatic tradition.

It is not that there are not teachers in this country who can give her these last instructions, because we know that there are; also that there is a disposition on the part of the directors of opera in America to give the home-trained artist a chance—a thing unheard of a few years ago. But, on the other hand, there are undoubtedly abroad a few teachers whose training in opera and in recital work has an authority—a hall mark—which is valuable to the young artist from a commercial point of view, as well as giving a feeling of surety which is worth a great deal.

These teachers have pupils in this country who teach their methods and pass on their traditions, but there is a satisfaction in gaining one's knowledge from the fountain head. Also, there is an atmosphere about student life in the older countries which is an inspiration to our young people, who have much to learn about study. It is the sugar that envelopes the pill and makes it go down easy. Something of this sort is growing up in our own large cities, but it has not reached and will not reach for many years the state of development which we find in the student life abroad.

This inspiration has its foundation in the fact that it is helpful when you are studying to be associated with others who are doing the same thing. There is an enlarging of one's point of view from the constant interchange of ideas coming from the different studios. The life itself becomes an education. There are, also, more opportunities to sing in public in countries where there are so many small opera houses, each with its own company, and a young singer can often make a name for herself that will open to her the doors of the Metropolitan Opera House when she returns to her own country. Mary Garden, Olive Fremstad, Edith Walker, Geraldine Farrar, and many others made their laurels abroad and came back to find a public waiting for them.

So much for the favorable side of the picture—now for the reverse. I believe that in nine cases out of ten it is absolute folly to send a student abroad to study until she has reached a stage of vocal and artistic development which will enable her to grasp the opportunities of foreign study. In the first place, many of the first-grade teachers over there will not take a pupil who is a beginner, but will hand her over to an advanced pupil. Now, if you have gone abroad simply to study with the celebrated Monsieur So-and-So, it is not pleasant to be obliged to put in a year or two with somebody else that you know nothing about. Most of us would rather stay in New York, Chicago, or San Francisco and study with some one we do know—to say nothing of being able in many cases to live at home and save our money.

Others will take the beginner and plunge her into a course of study for which she is about as well prepared as the grammar school graduate is for the science of trigonometry. How can a girl intelligently study interpretation and dramatic singing when she has not yet learned to sing on the breath and has not the faintest idea how to produce the tones that she is giving out? Obviously, she is wasting time and money.

Take even those cases where the master teacher is willing to go back with the beginner to the A, B, C's of voice work. Consider the waste of money. The pupil is paying a high price for lessons, besides the expense incurred in the going abroad, for what she should be able to get much more reasonably either in her home city or in one much more accessible than London or Paris. Add to these arguments the fact that quacks abound in all lands and that you are just as apt to be victimized in Paris as in Kansas City, and you have a fair statement of the case.

Of course, in all that I have said in regard to study I have had in mind those who are able financially to make a choice. Many students, splendidly equipped with voice and brains, have no choice. Poverty pushes them out early in the game to make their own way, and it is splendid and inspiring to see how some of them do it. The girl who by sheer ability manages, by filling small engagements, singing in church, teaching a little, perhaps, sometimes even working in an office, to make herself a place in the musical world, deserves all the help and encouragement we can give her.

I can honestly say that I have never known a teacher who lived and believed in his work who had not lent a helping hand to some of these strugglers. As every conscientious doctor has his free list, so every earnest teacher has had at one time or another pupils who never paid in money, but who often paid double in gratitude and results.

Afterward

In summing up these pages, which I greatly hope may prove to be a continuation of the work which I have been privileged to do with my pupils, let me set down a few timely hints which perhaps the young singer will accept gracefully from the older one. They have been tried and proved by many who have gone before us.

Be slow in choosing your teacher, but be prompt to leave him once you are convinced that he is not helping you. Remember, it is not necessary to take a year to show you how to BEGIN to sing!

Do your part of the work. Don't expect the teacher to do it for you—no merely human being can.

Remember that the moment you are not singing easily you are not singing correctly. Find out what is wrong.

Be modest enough to realize that though you may be gifted, you probably have your faults, and that a proper recognition of them goes far toward getting rid of them, as well as making you an agreeable and pleasing part of the world scheme. You know, important as it is to be a great artist, it is even more important to be a real person. It isn't enough to be a mere vehicle for the interpretation of somebody's masterpiece. If you are a real person, you are a masterpiece.

Try to be a musician—not merely a singer. Most great singers know something of the other branches of their art and find it a help to them in their careers.

A healthy body is just as necessary for a singer as it is for an athlete. Many and many a promising career has been ruined by poor habits of living. Ask any successful prima donna what part careful diet, exercise and regular habits play in her success.

Cultivate an optimistic temperament, but do not expect to get anything in the way of artistic recognition that you do not have to work for—both to get and to keep. A great pianist once said: "If I neglect my practice for one day, I know it; two days, my friends know it; three days and the public knows it."

And now, my dear young lady from New York, Illinois, Colorado, Texas or California, may you have every success that your eager, optimistic soul yearns for and that your beautiful voice deserves! May you find yourself early in life on the right path, and may you continue in it till you have reached the top of the ladder of fame, where, we are assured, there is so much room! May you reach it with the smallest possible sacrifice of youth, ideals, and voice, and stay there until the years arrive when the ladder of fame becomes a little unrestful to one's feet, and may you then have a quiet and happy spot to retire to, with two or three congenial souls to share it with you and as little of the bitterness of defeat and disappointment as it is given to any of us to remember!

Sunday evening Grant Hadley, baritone, sang a group of songs at the All-American Exposition. He was in fine form and his singing enjoyed to the full.

CHICAGO OPERA

The Chicago Opera announces that Mme. Borghild Langaard, dramatic soprano, has been engaged for the coming season for several important roles. She comes to Chicago after singing in many of the leading opera houses of Italy, Germany, Scandinavia, and France. Several Europeans are said to have acclaimed her as "Scandinavia's most glorious voice." Her best Italian roles are Amelia, in "The Masked Ball," and Abigaille in "Nabucco." She sang Brunnhilde in the first English performance of "The Valkyrie" at Covent Garden, and one of the finest achievements of her career was her performance there of Santuzza, under the baton of Maestro Campanini.

When the fall term of the Chicago Musical College opens September 15 the institution will start its fifty-fourth year with an enrollment of unprecedented size. Already students are pouring in from every portion of the country, and, if numbers and enthusiasm are any criterion, the interest in music this season is greater than ever it has been before.

A MUSICIAN'S LETTER FROM FRANCE

Gievres, France, August 9, 1919.

Music News: In my last letter I wrote about my meeting with some Czecho-Slovak soldiers here at Camp Gievres. We were asked to give a special concert for them and also for the company of Polish soldiers stationed here. This was a month ago when we were playing at this camp for the first time. (We are now filling a return engagement here.)

These soldiers escort salvage trains to Czecho-Slovakia and Poland loaded with material bought from the American Government.

The concert was arranged for 2:30 p. m. a few days later. The Poles, about 150 of them, arrived at the "Y" Auditorium first, marching in a body in squad formation. The Bohemians, a company of about 150 men, arrived about fifteen minutes later, also in squad formation, marching with a mighty tread, singing a Bohemian song in a deep bass voice as they swung along. It sent a thrill through me as I watched these grizzled warriors approaching. I had prepared a short speech of welcome in Bohemian, but I can hardly describe the emotions that filled me as I stepped on the platform to deliver it. Here was I facing these modest veterans, every one of whom virtually had been in the service ever since the summer of 1914 and had gone through countless privations and continuous and most desperate fighting in France, Italy, and Siberia. And while the war was on these men were not even accorded the honorable status of a soldier, but were considered as deserters by the Austrian and German authorities, and if any one of them fell into the hands of the enemy they were hanged. A short time ago I had the pleasure, en route to Tours, to meet the "commandant" (major), a tall Bohemian, who is the military attache at Paris of the new Czecho-Slovak Republic. This man, during the early part of the war, served in the French Foreign Legion. He told me that the Bohemian soldiers of the legion had made a death compact one with another that no man was to be captured alive by the enemy. If worst came to worst, they were to kill each other, and it is significant that not one of them was ever made prisoner. Neither did they take prisoners; in other words, no quarter was asked or given. This same man related to me that the regiment of the Foreign Legion in which he served numbered 3,000 men. It lost during the war 75,000 men in killed alone! As soon as a man was put out of action he was replaced with another until the number of casualties reached this appalling figure. At the fighting at Arras out of a regiment of 5,000 men in which he fought only about 900 returned alive! During the fighting in the Champagne his regiment of 3,500 men returned with but 800 men alive! And only a short time ago he had received his first letter from home in five years!

The Bohemian captain in charge of the Czechs here at Gievres also has a most remarkable story to relate. He first went over to the Russians, then joined a volunteer regiment for Serbia and in the fighting there was seriously wounded, losing the sight of his left eye. Then he went across Russia and Siberia to the port of Dalny, and from there via Singapore, Suez Canal, Greece, etc., to France, where he joined his compatriots and fought on the French front. The Polish lieutenant here likewise related that he had joined the Polish soldiers in France via Archangel and England, and he, too, only a short while ago had received his first letter from home in five years! And such modesty and unassuming demeanor which characterizes these humble men, every one of whom could relate a wonderful tale of fighting and adventure if they wanted to do so.

The concert was a success, and I have since had some very pleasant visits with the Czech captain and soldiers, for this time we are staying in the camp itself instead of the near-by village. We are very pleasantly situated and enjoying our experiences immensely. However, our boys are very rapidly being sent home, and this camp, and all others, in fact, is assuming a deserted appearance, with the French gradually taking possession.

Two weeks ago we had our first opportunity to visit Reims and outlying battlefields, and shortly afterward we made a pilgrimage to Soissons and from there to a station called Anizy-Pinon. It is simply impossible to describe the utter destruction and desolation of the scene. It must be seen to be appreciated. As one stands on the pulverized heap of debris of what was once Fort La Pompelle (near Reims) or on the Chemin des Dames (four kilos distant from Anizy-Pinon) and views the destruction all around, the razed villages and the solitary, lonely graves that continually line the roadside and trench systems, one's heart and mind is filled with sadness. Even the very trees in the forests—whole acres of them—and along the roads, all splintered, shattered, dead and black and charred as though destroyed by a forest fire. This devastated region will hardly ever again be built up—no, not in a hundred years.

CARL CRAVEN TO THE GAMBLE HINGE CO.

Carl Craven, Chicago tenor, has written as follows to the Gamble Hinge Co.:

"I sang 'Precious Mother,' by De Parry, before an audience of 6,000 people at Lincoln, Ill., August 17, and at Fullerton, Neb., Sunday, August 24, to an audience of 10,000 people, and the song goes over better than any that I have ever sung before the public."

THE PRESS AT LARGE

In this division of Music News there will be printed, week by week, comments on various concerts and artists which have appeared in the daily and weekly press of the country. This is done in the belief that this matter will be found to be of great interest to a large number of people. This is in no sense an advertising department, and no items will be accepted for pay

Dr. Muck Compelled to Sail

Although determined to remain in this country, probably to conduct for the new Star Opera Company, which promises German opera at the Lexington Theater in October, Dr. Karl Muck, former conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was placed on board a steamer for Norway at the instance of the American Government with warning to the captain of the liner to make sure that Dr. Muck should not leave the vessel within the three mile limit. He is said to have stated that he was leaving the United States with no regrets, but with bitter resentment against the newspapers, which he said had treated him unfairly. He also stated that he did not believe the orchestra would be reorganized, as twenty-nine German members had been interned.—The Musical Leader.

Where the Ravinia Singers Will Go

Miss Easton and Mr. Harrold are to go with Mr. Scotti on a tour before the start of their new season in the Metropolitan Opera House, where they will be associates. Miss Ingram, too, goes there—like Mr. Harrold, for the first time. Miss Gentle does not go back to the Metropolitan, but Miss Garrison does—as principal coloratura. Papi and Hageman, the conductors, return, as do Mr. Kingston and Mr. D'Angelo. Miss Mason is expected to go back to Mexico City to sing with Caruso in the early autumn. Miss Sharlow goes on tour with Mr. Campanini to sing Musetta in "La Boheme" with Alma Gluck and Alessandro Bonci. Miss Maxwell is not returning to Mr. Campanini's flock. Riccardo Martin's future is unknown; but Mr. Rother, the French basso, and Mr. Picco, the Italian baritone, will be with so many of their summer associates—in the Metropolitan.—Chicago Tribune.

Herbert Gould at the Quiver Lake Chautauqua at Havana, Ill.

In the role of Ahasuerus, King of Persia, Herbert Gould, famous song leader of the Great Lakes Naval Training Camp, gave a portrayal of the character that swept not only the audience but also the cast and chorus of the opera along to heights of intense enthusiasm by the virility of his acting and the fervor of his singing. In the great scene of fire worship in the Temple of Bel, and in the denunciation climax of the finale, his artistry and talent were unmistakably made manifest.

Frances Papert in the South

The following comment appeared in the Dallas (Texas) Press during the recent visit of the Boston Ideal Opera Company in the South:

One of the leading women at Lake Cliff Casino is Miss Frances Papert, contralto. Miss Papert is French, as most anyone would surmise, or at least of French descent, but is very glad that she is American born. Her home is in Chicago and her parents live there now. She was educated in music in that city and has been singing in grand opera several years. The French spelling is "Francois," but Miss Papert prefers plain Frances. She is not only a singer, but an orator as well. Miss Papert preceded the other members of the Boston Ideal Opera Company to Dallas several days to help get the publicity "lined up." She has appeared at one of the noon luncheon clubs each day this past week, telling the merits of her company, which will make its premier in Dallas Sunday night in "Il Trovatore."

Comment on Mary H. Flagg's "Stories of the Great Music Masters" have been as follows:

May Peterson in California

May Peterson, American singer, is a cosmopolitan artist of many talents. She is the embodiment of spiritual, mental and physical poise, all of which gave to her vocal work last night at Trinity Auditorium that final touch of completeness which many a singer more mature than she lacks.

Miss Peterson gave a wide range of songs, including English, French, Spanish, Russian and Scotch, and two songs of German origin sung in English. Her diction was true and distinctive. She is equipped with a voice capable of remarkable melodic inflections, which she used with artistic discretion throughout her program.

She ranks with Anna Case, a former artist, in being truly American, without mannerisms, but with a depth of individuality. Her impromptu remarks, given with grace of personality and thought, won instant appreciation. This was partly because the little personal touch was an innovation.

Miss Peterson made several numbers so popular that she had to repeat them. Among these were "Le Papillon" (Fourdrain), "Songs My Mother Taught Me" (Dvorak), "I'm Wearin' Awa', Jean" (Old Scotch), and "De Ol' Ark's a-Movin'" (negro spiritual by Guion). She sang with pleasing effect "The Open Road," by the Los Angeles composer, Gertrude Ross. This received much applause. As a last encore Miss Peterson played her own accompaniment for "The Lass With a Delicate Air."—Los Angeles Evening Express.

SUMMER NOTES FROM NEW YORK

By JOSEPH DE VALDOR

Kathryn Lee at Stadium

Sunday evening, August 24, the American soprano, Kathryn Lee, appeared at the Stadium. She gave "Ritorna Vincitor," from "Aida," an excellent and effective interpretation. Miss Lee's voice carries well even in the open air. Mary Carson, soprano, was the other soloist. Arnold Volpe conducted as usual.

P. S.

Henry Hadley for the Stadium

Henry Hadley's guest appearance as conductor at the Stadium concerts attracted much attention. It is said in many quarters that our excellent American composer is to be the permanent leader of the Stadium, beginning the summer season of 1920. Mr. Hadley has always given satisfaction to critics and public. And, then, why shouldn't we inaugurate a new era for American arts?

Pierre Monteux Returns

While the deposed leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck, was heading for his fatherland Pierre Monteux, his successor, was on the Lorraine returning to New York. Mr. Monteux arrived on Monday, August 25, with his wife and two children.

Music at the Rialto

With our theaters thrown into darkness, the movies are reaping rich harvests. One's misfortune is always somebody's fortune. For the week ending August 31 the Rialto attracted unusually large audiences.

Mr. Riesenfeld conducted with brio the "Sicilian Vespers" overture by Verdi. James Harrod, a tenor, sang "Mother, My Dear," by Treharne. Rudolph Friml's "Some Time" received attention from the Rialto Orchestra. Arthur Depew played on the organ "Triumphal March From Nauman," by Michael Costa.

The Stadium Orchestra Features Tirindelli's Composition—His Songs to Be a Feature of the Next Season

It takes a long time before one gains recognition in New York, but P. A. Tirindelli, the violin pedagogue and composer, is coming to the fore by sheer force of ability as a musician and composer. The week ending August 31 Mr. Arnold Volpe, the conductor of the Stadium Symphony Orchestra, featured Mr. Tirindelli's composition for orchestra, "Interludio," and its success was insured by the tremendous ovation tendered to its author. No novelty has been received with such spontaneous acclaim as the composition of Tirindelli. This Italian musician is a gifted song writer of the classic type, and next season many prominent artists will feature his works.

Opening of the Strand Theater in Brooklyn

The Strand circuit of movie music houses opened another theater at Brooklyn on August 30. It is said that this new house is one of the most perfect playhouses in America. For the opening week the following musical program was offered: Grace Hoffman, coloratura soprano, in a rendition of "Ah, for 'e lui," from "Traviata," Carlo Ferretti, baritone, singing "Lolita," by Buzzi-Peccia and the popular "O Sole mio." The orchestra, under the direction of Alois Reiser, played excerpts from Puccini's "La Boheme." Messrs. A. C. Smith and Frank S. Adams, organists, played "March Triumphal" (Smith).

Camp Music of the War Department

The Commission of Training Camp Activities has sent out a booklet of fifty pages dealing with the music in the camps. It is compiled by Frances F. Brundage, assistant director, camp music division. The following chapters deal at length with the activities of the commission: "Music in the Camps," "The Singing Doughboy," and "The Army Song Leaders." There are also several illustrations. The booklet is printed under the auspices of the government.

"Il Trovatore" at the Stadium

Verdi's opera was given in concert form on Wednesday evening, August 27, and it may be said that the ensemble accomplished better results than in the two previous "Aida" performances. If there were noticeable shortcomings and if dragging of certain portions occurred here and there it is, perhaps, due to the lack of rehearsals. Again, Olga Carrara was called to the platform to sing "Leonora." The voice, in fact, sounded more brilliant than on previous occasions. The beauty of her lyric voice left no doubt about her marvelous organ. She sang with accuracy. Her singing was vociferously applauded. Lilian Eubank as Azucena excelled herself, vocally and artistically. She was equal to her task, and I am glad to record her superb singing. She is to tour with the Chicago Opera Association, when she is expected to sing Amneris. Zanco De Primo displayed an excellent middle register and a splendid upper. His fiery singing of the "Di quella pira" was redemanded by the audience. He sings with feeling and expression. Mr. De Primo's success was one of the undoubtful factors of the performance. Phillip Benyan was heard on other occasions to better advantage. His singing of Count De Luna up to the "Il balen del sew soriso" was pleasurable. M. Herodas was satisfactory as Ferrando. The chorus sang well. The audience was cordial.

The Elderly Person

The Elderly Person will never know quite how it happened that he fell on the two books, at one time, which he needed to help adjust him to the after-effects of the war. Perhaps it would be better not to be too sure about being fully adjusted and say that the books were aids towards that end. It's a poor sort of citizen who hasn't had his mental perplexities and been wondering whether we were going to land on the top of the situation or go to the demnition bow-wows. And it's a wiser one who figures that the reconstruction process is a slow one and an evolutionary one; that there is no out-and-out panacea to stop the universal stomachache. One has to figure that he is in for something that will try him and his powers of patience and endurance.

Like people who are squeamish when the ship rolls in a storm, it is a bit of habit to stock up on remedies which may help one to hold tight in a world that is wobbling about unsteadily. Just now our pilots and captains and sailors are not understanding one another completely and certainly are not pulling well together, and one needs a bracer.

After he had read W. L. George's "Blind Alley" and J. C. Snaith's "The Undefeated," The Elderly Person was quite ready to agree with his bookish young friend, who met him with the volumes under his arm—that they were the two English novels which best pictured the England of and just after the war. Each story carries its characters through the full period of struggle and beyond the armistice. And right here is why they are helpful. One set of people are, in the vernacular, "up in the air" all along, and left there by the author. In the confusion of a blind alley they put their teeth together grimly and endure, but there is little or no light ahead. The other group is steadied; the people have met the situation and know what the experience has done for them personally, finding in that result enough to encourage them in facing a future which even the most sanguine soul knows to be full of perplexity.

Mr. George is of the new generation of novelists which finds its mission fulfilled if it faithfully depicts what it sees. It does not effect any purpose, any intention to point a moral, to even tell a tale which winds up definitely, or to preach any doctrine. Its outlined design is limited by the effort to depict situations so interestingly that they are tense, to use pithy language which seeks to sparkle withal. It disdains, as inartistic, any logic save pessimism—that things are bad, always have been bad, always will be bad, because they can't help being so. That heroics and sentiment are tawdry remnants of the Victorian age, which fairly seethed with emotional blather. That the social fabric, as a whole, wove a wrong pattern a long time ago, and the right thing is to tear holes in it wherever and whenever possible, and thus in due time make its meshes so worthless that it will fall to pieces. From this a freer structure, not yet well worked out, can be raised, wherein people will in some way be allowed to do exactly what they please and yet not hurt anyone thereby.

In putting forth such novels the writers maintain that they are the mirrors of their day. That the object of a novel is not to send a reader to sleep or make him forget time on a train. Its purpose is to show character, stimulate observation, make life vivid. And life is most vivid when most unpleasant. Thus Mr. George, in his "Literary Chapters." A full statement, but not convincing. The world, then, as he sees it, just now leads everyone into a blind alley and the war led into the same place. People and nations are crowding and pushing and scrambling therein, hardly knowing if they are trying to get out or not. For the most part he regards them as helpless and hopeless, and doesn't offer any hint of rescue. He intimates that those who are not too earnest about correcting things come nearer sensing the best course to move in. That much more dissecting will have to undo what has been done before the right outlet will be uncovered. Perhaps his theory is all right, but it doesn't seem quite fair.

His style is clear and vivid to the point of brittleness. "Snappy stuff" in a way, but redeemed by a wealth of humor, many examples of high spirit and serene confidence—these almost betraying him into emotion.

Two Beautiful Songs for Soprano

Endorsed and sung by the following artists: Florence Easton, Frieda Hempel, Yvonne de Treville, Florence Macbeth, Florence Otis, Nina Dimitrieff, Lucy Gates, Marie Tiffany, Mme. Buckhout, Tilla Gemunder, Olive Kline, Edith Frank, Louise McMahon, Cora Remington and Mable Corlew Smith.

The Elderly Person finds himself wondering what George and his confreres and their approving critics and poets are driving at. A recent editorial exulted in the success of "The Education of Henry Adams" as a token that the world was at last accepting pessimism and blue devils as the dominating forces and was losing a doddering fantasy which believed in ideals as ruling powers. Just where is the philosophy of it all—this pleasure in destroying and giving nothing to replace what is taken away? Any reader is a coward who declines to mull and sift over the new thought of his day. But just now it is so hard to find out what the fellows are after. It has usually been safe to look askance at theories which could not state a case lucidly, squarely.

Snaith belongs to the new order also, but, apart from his careful reserve and determination not to fill out details, "The Undefeated" is far more human than "Blind Alley." In fact, the two titles fairly state the case. Persons in a blind alley may exist there awhile, but if they don't get out they are defeated. They simply cannot go straight ahead. Mr. George has a lot of characters in his book and gives short, sparkling glimpses of them at times, leaving, however, two-thirds of their development to the imagination of the reader. Mr. Snaith has just a few figures, circling the events about one family, practically. In the first portion of "The Undefeated" they are wholly depressing—in the last pages heroism and sweetness and the milk of human kindness are saturating the pages. It just looks as if Mr. Snaith fell in love with Bill Hollis, ex-barman, and Melia, his wife, and simply had to make them admirable. As against Mr. George's flock, all at sea, all dissatisfied with themselves and one another, and stumbling about in the various blind alleys where their impulses have led them, is placed the shining picture of Sergeant Bill with his damaged ideals, broken standards, but honest heart and smouldering courage, almost sheathed in the white armor of the unsullied. And all because the war enabled him to pick up his broken life and patch it until it counted for bravery and strength. There are pages of delicious revelation of character. One just frets that Snaith is so fearful of letting himself loose. More detail of that Christmas dinner, when first the soldier returns home from barracks and told of his friendship with the painter, would have brought the author the tribute of comparison with Dickens. Perhaps he would scoff at that, however, as dubious praise. And the description of their day in London, just before he sailed, is a delectable morsel. From being a pair who quarrelled and hated one another, Bill and Melia became lovers—she proud of "her man" and he looking up to "Mother" as a guiding star. Although there had been no children, one comes to replace him when the supreme sacrifice is exacted from him and the final picture is of an English christening.

Somehow the homely lessons suggested by the book do not fail to leave their influence on the reader. Out of all the muck and riot and ugliness, the snarling viciousness, the profiteering, the cowardice, hypocrisy, and the indifference engendered in the war, the redemption of this simple pair carries an atmosphere of truth and loyalty which is sane and steadfast. It helps a man to get his balance. Times are out of joint and the surroundings are full of cruelty, unfairness, bitterness. But these are not admirable; they are not the lasting qualities; they are not enviable. Down in his best self, when he sees it squarely before him and contrasted with its assertive neighbor, every soul craves nobility of spirit. One wants to be forgiven when he slides away from it, but he knows he can never amount to much in his own estimation, to say nothing of the world's, unless he hitches his wagon to the star of his ideal.

There are certain traits which are dubbed "old-fashioned virtues," but they possess a something which remains durable. And never more so than when contrasted. For that reason these two books go well together. It's just as well in this crisis to steady oneself by facing the fact that there are blind alleys, but that the undefeated are those who refuse to enter therein.

THE ELDERLY PERSON.

MAYER ARTISTS BOOKED FOR CARBONDALE (PA.) SERIES

In view of the great success which has attended the Keystone and Philharmonic Concert Series in the near-by city of Scranton, a new manager has come into the field in Carbondale, Pa., in the person of F. R. Tralles, who has had past experience in theatrical enterprises in Syracuse, N. Y. In conjunction with the Carbondale Cycle Club, Mr. Tralles has arranged a series of concerts to be given during the coming season, opening with the Russian Symphony Orchestra, Modest Altschuler, conductor, on October 20. Lenora Sparkes, the Metropolitan Opera soprano, and Phlilip Gordon, pianist, in joint recital, will furnish the second concert on December 4, and the final number will be Emma Roberts, the New York contralto, in song recital on January 30. All of these artists have been engaged through Daniel Mayer.

SASCHA VOTICHENKO

Mr. and Mrs. Sascha Votichenko are planning to take a motor trip to Bar Harbor on the first of September in the automobile which Votichenko recently purchased and which he drives himself, stopping on their return trip for a short visit to Niagara Falls.

Votichenko believes that musicians should occasionally seek relaxation from the nerve-strain of creative work in some form of physical exercise or manual labor, and with this end in view, he is at present attending the Atkinson Automobile School, learning not only how to repair an automobile, but becoming familiar with every form of its mechanism and construction.

Although, recently, Votichenko was arrested twice for speeding, his enthusiasm for motoring remains undaunted. He believes that an artist who has spent a few hours of vigorous exercise in the outdoors, away from the tedious monotony of his daily tasks, invariably returns to his artistic work or creative endeavors with renewed confidence, enthusiasm and health.

Wilson—Edna Walgrove Wilson has just returned from an extended trip through Wisconsin, Minnesota and the Upper Peninsula of Michigan. She reports a strenuous season, having sung one hundred and twenty concerts. She will resume her work in Chicago this season and will fill many engagements in and around the city.

Kortzenborn—George Kortzenborn, baritone, substituted at the South Congregational Church all of the month of August.

PASSING COMMENT

The National American Music Festival, which was held last week at Lockport, N. Y., proved to be immensely greater in every way than had any of the three preceding yearly events managed by A. A. Van de Mark at this distinctly energetic and beautiful American city.

On account of the great mass of material about the Festival, and the difficulty of getting some necessary cuts, the detailed review in Music News will not appear until next week, but there are some items pressing for immediate expression which will find place here and now.

The most notable thing about the Festival this year is the fact that not only has the event itself grown in size and importance, but also the Composers and Artists who have been its faithful helpers and attendents since its inception have grown with it.

Lockport is a wonderful melting pot, and Composers who find place on the Festival programs are put to the merciless test of enormous competition and comparison, and while it is true that many mediocre works have been presented here, it is just as true that good works have invariably been recognized and their Composers have received an indorsement and an impetus which has resulted in decided growth.

Beyond a doubt the general average of Compositions (especially songs) presented at Lockport has improved amazingly in four years and those Composers whose works have found place year after year have shown a steady improvement.

And the same thing is true of the artists. Lockport has been "the making" of many young artists, and even a single appearance here has been a broadening and an improving event in the lives of the artists who have had the experience, while those who have appeared annually have grown with the place, and it would be easy to recognize through their performances that they are old-timers here, even if the names were not known.

Anyone who comes to Lockport with too-selfish motives or who has an undue appreciation of his own values will fall flat, for the place is intensely democratic, as well as critical, and there being such a mass of material from which to pick favorites, self-valuation counts for nothing, and absolute ability to sing or play and at the same time disclose the absolute musical and Nationalistic values in the programmed numbers is essential.

If there is a harvest ahead, even a distant one, it is poor thrift to be stingy of your seed-corn.

—Carlyle.

Two points have come up for discussion repeatedly during the week, and an expression of opinion here is not, therefore, out of place.

The first is the question of Transcriptions.

Several times on the program there were cases of European works "arranged" by American Composers and put on as American works.

This is so absolutely contrary to the whole spirit and purpose of the Festival that Music News has no hesitancy in saying that such numbers ought absolutely to be ruled out.

For our part, we will not mention these numbers in Music News' review.

The second question is in regard to Manuscript songs. Many of those present, including, of course, the Publishers, insisted that a song should have the indorsement and prestige of acceptance by an established Publishing House before it is allowed place on the Lockport programs.

We disagree with this idea in toto. Many (if not most) of the master works of the World were performed first from Manuscript, and it happens often at Lockport that special pieces are written too late for publication at the special request of performers.

Of course, the public presentation of these may disclose fatal defects, but not all printed music finds favor at Lockport by any means, and, as said above, this Festival is the great "trying-out" ground for both Artists and Composers, and while there should be reasonable safeguards as to both, the absolute prohibition of manuscript compositions would be as foolish as the barring of singers who were not already Metropolitan favorites.

There were, this year, many International artists on the progrem, and they, of course, added prestige and great artistic delights, but Lockport should not by any means be turned over to this class of Artists, even if the financial status warranted the step.

Lockport is nothing if not democratic, and it should be kept as a meeting place for those Artists, Managers, Publishers and Composers who are willing to "make a week of it" and lend their presence, encouragement and critical judgment to each composition on the program and each performer.

Many good artists have been and still are willing to do this, and the too-free introduction of those whose only interest is in their own single appearance would be a mistake.

Referring again to the "growth" of con-

His work was received with enthusiasm and appreciation.

Music in Chicago

THE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY

The Philharmonic Society of New York will inaugurate its seventy-eighth season this Fall with Josef Stransky, conductor of the orchestra, entering upon his ninth season in that position. Although it is still exceedingly difficult to procure European novelties, Mr. Stransky is fortunate enough to have secured several, details concerning which will be announced later. As in former years, Mr. Stransky's programs will offer many American compositions, several of which will be novelties.

The Philharmonic season will include twelve Thursday evenings, sixteen Friday afternoons, four Saturday evenings and twelve Sunday afternoons in Carnegie Hall, as well as the usual series of five Sunday concerts at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. In addition to these performances in Greater New York, the orchestra will also make three short tours to over thirty cities throughout the country. The list of assisting artists for the New York concerts has been chosen, as usual, from the names of the prominent instrumentalists and vocalists available and will be announced in full at an early date.

A month before the first New York performance the orchestra will reassemble, with few changes though slightly augmented. Several weeks previous to the arrival of the orchestra Conductor Stransky will return to the city from his Summer home in the Adirondacks.

Although the Carnegie Hall box office will not be open until October 1, applications for seats are now being received at the offices of the society in Carnegie Hall.

WHAT NOW?

An Address Delivered by Charles E. Watt at the National American Music Festival at Lockport, N. Y., on September 2, and Reproduced Here by Request

Last year when we met here at Lockport the United States was deep in the World War and our thought was, necessarily—more of that than of any other one thing.

"Our first business," we said, "is to win the war." But now that the war is won we are as deep in a thousand other perplexities.

The past year has been one of unparalleled unrest and commotion, and the questions arising for thought and solution have been practically continuous.

But, out of it all there is coming order and satisfaction. One by one the World questions—great and small, have been or are being, answered.

And every department of the World's work—humble or pretentious, has fully recognized the fact of change and necessary improvements over old practices and models.

That is, the recognition has been full in almost every department of work other than music—for, with us, the changes and the improvements have not yet been of equal bulk to those in most other lines.

This grows out of the fact—so often repeated, that music, although the very first to suffer from the shock of war or any other public embarrassment, is also the last to recover from it, and—while it is entirely correct to say that music is today in a vastly improved condition over that of last year at this time, it is not yet in anything like good working order, and the effects of the lean years of the war are still much in evidence.

And—at this moment of the rehabilitation of the art in this country and preparation for the coming growth which, it is safe to say, is full of possibilities, we may well ask, What Now?

The World is different from what it was before the war, and in nearly every department of work there has been evolved new plans of operation. There is an added breadth and depth to everything.

We in music must therefore look alive to the prophecies and the possibilities of the times and must rid ourselves of every false notion of music propriety and also take on a new set of ideas which will conform better to the general life of the moment than has much with which we have been burdened in the past.

We have been told that the operations of a certain Musical Alliance are to provide the musical salvation of the country, but we do not believe that anything born, reared and maintained in such strict privacy as this Alliance can ever be a really big factor in the musical situation of any country, much less so independent a country as is the United States of America.

I need not name or locate this Alliance any more pointedly, but I have only to tell you that the entire personnel of its officers is chosen (self-chosen at that) from the list of officers of one weekly music paper to show that it could not possibly be Nationalistic in influence nor that its President could become the Moses who will lead us out of the musical wilderness.

An Alliance which really intends to be of country-wide value and service must needs have its officers and directors chosen from a very wide field of musical activity and must include not alone Editors and publishers of music papers, but also music publishers, composers, artists, teachers, dealers and writers of wide choice and the greatest possible distinction.

But—pending the formation of any such Society, what can we, as individuals and as groups, such as this one at Lockport, think about and what can we do to put the music of the country into a more stable and profitable class?

We can and must think of three important elements which should be incorporated into the music situation of the country for the future and, as individuals and musical bodies we can, and should do our utmost to disseminate and develop these ideas.

. . . . . .

The three things, then—which seem to me to be essential for the present and the future and which have been in some degree or another lacking in our music situation of the past are: (1) The Democratization of Music, (2) The Americanization of Music, and (3) The More Logical Commercialization of Music.

. . . . . .

Since the beginning of the war—and for a little while previous to that perhaps, we have heard a great deal about Community Singing and the teaching of music in the public schools and a few other things which come under the head of Democratization of Music and which, if they continue to occupy as much thought in the future as they have in the immediate past will be a tremendous influence for good.

There is no reason whatever why music should not be taught to every child in the country by the Government nor why there should not be High School Orchestras—and small Choral groups in factories, stores and every other sort of Community.

There is no reason why there should not be a thousand-fold increase in civic concerts, civic Community singing and other forms of music nor why, in time, these should not grow into municipal bands, Symphony orchestras and opera companies.

This may cause a smile on some faces but—after all there is no logical reason whatever why the money of the people should not be spent in this way nor why the Government should not listen as attentively to such plans as it does to scores of other public improvement ideas.

And all of this should be watched and fostered by musicians themselves very carefully, for out of the Democratization of Music—out of the fact that everybody can be taught to appreciate and love music will grow that larger clientele and following for the professional musician which will, in time, place him in a much more independent position than he has heretofore occupied.

And out of the war experience has grown another fact, i. e., the appreciation of the need for music as a constant requirement in many places where heretofore it has been supplied as an occasional luxury only.

All Hospitals—all Reformatory Institutions—All Prisons—All Charity Colonies of every description should have provision for regular allowances of applied music.

Musicians should find, in the future, a great outlet for their services in this work alone.

But, twenty minutes does not allow sufficient leeway for the too ample discussion of subjects which have already been much discussed, and so we hurry on to the second division of our subject—i. e., "The Americanization of Music."

. . . . . .

The unfortunate subservience of the Public to the foreign element in music in this country is very far from being a thing of the past, although it has received a decided blow during war times.

This subservience on the part of the public is, as I have said before, the direct outgrowth of the attitude of musicians themselves and particularly of the critics of the daily press in our larger cities and of many of our most influential teachers.

These teachers, many of them having studied abroad—scores of them having been born across the water and many of those born here having affiliations in Europe, are loath to give up the idea so long cherished that the only real "musical atmosphere" is to be found in Europe and therefore they are continually guilty of the absurdity of fostering a false attitude which is taken up and maintained by the public at large.

For nothing is simpler or more certain than that the Public takes its cue from the professional musician and, did the latter but insist (and help to prove), that the American musician is equal to the European—nay, in many cases much better, the public would soon be weaned from the idea which has so long persisted.

If the daily newspaper critics of New York and Chicago would persistently call attention to the best of American music and just as persistently point out the absurdity of worshiping foreign music and musicians simply because they are foreign, the situation would change very rapidly.

. . . . . .

Last fall, Josef Hofmann paid American

Composers the compliment of preparing an entire program of American compositions.

This he presented in New York to splendid appreciation in so far as the audience was concerned, but the critics of the daily press—next day, without exception, were lukewarm (and in many cases, absolutely antagonistic) in their comments.

The program was repeated in Boston with similar results.

Later, it was offered by the Hofmann management to several cities of the Middle West and was promptly declined because of the black eye given it by the New York and Boston critics.

In speaking to me later of the matter Mr. Hofmann said: "There can be no real appreciation or growth of American music in this country so long as the Eastern newspaper critics maintain the present attitude of hostility to American composition and their servile idea of the unalterable superiority of Europe."

This is, of course—an intolerable situation and it must be corrected as rapidly as possible.

The patriotic musicians of America must demand the suppression—even, if necessary, the deportation of this class of critics.

For, there is absolutely no reason for a longer retention of the idea of a fixed superiority of the German or any other foreign music.

. . . . . .

During the war we discovered that we could, with perfect ease, evolve and enjoy programs which contained not a particle of German music.

We found out that Scarlatti is a very acceptable substitute for Bach—that Rameau has classical qualities comparable to the best of the Old German School.

We found, too, that Grieg is an excellent substitute for Schubert or Schumann and—best of all, it was proven in hundreds of concerts and studios that the MacDowell Sonatas were just as effective as Beethoven had been or ever could be again.

We had American programs by the score and we found that they were as interesting and as valuable as any type to which we had been listening.

And now that the war is over, why revert to the old manner?

Why not recognize at once that the big thing that is needed in our music is that it should be Americanized?

We in America believe in ourselves in every other line of endeavor—why not accept the fact that we excel signally in music and insist before the whole World that our own music is the best in the World (at least for us) and that we want it to have first place all the time.

Why must we always give over our best places to foreign musicians and foreign music?

. . . . . .

Mr. Campanini, Director General of the Chicago Opera Company, said in a recent interview that there is no future for grand opera in this country.

Perhaps Mr. Campanini was wrong and then again, perhaps he was right, but in a way entirely different from what he meant.

The time ought to be ripe for the Americanization of grand opera, and if this were done it might be true indeed that the days of the old forms of grand opera are numbered—that we shall have no more opera houses in this country devoted exclusively to French, Italian and German works, but that we shall use these only as a balance and as companion pieces to our own, new, American opera.

Opera on American subjects that we can appreciate as well as good translations of standard works—sung in English that we can understand and presented by American artists in a way that will be in exact accord with the best thought and growth of the America of tomorrow!

Certainly—the Democratization of music is a big thought and its complete realization will open untold vistas, but still more important is the thought of the Americanization of music, for—the country has grown too large to any longer really care for something which is distinctly foreign and not at all a part of the National life.

Did France and Italy become great music countries by continually fostering the music of other countries?

Not at all. They placed their own music first under every circumstance, they listened only to their own languages in their concert rooms, they insisted—always, upon opera in the vernacular and thus, through Nationalization their music became great.

And we too must learn the lesson. We still need the music of France, Italy, Russia and all the rest, as well as the Old Classics of Germany—for models, for comparisons and for variety, but our own Composers should receive first attention and our own music be placed First.

And the same rule must apply to American artists. When a vacancy occurs in one of our big Symphony Orchestras we should search diligently for an American who might fill the place and—finding one, we should give him full opportunity to prove his worth.

Why not indeed, lift our imagination to the time when we could have an American as Director of the Metropolitan Opera House in New York or of the Chicago Opera Company?

Do you not believe that Americans could be evolved for these places and so trained and routined that they could do as well as any foreigner? Certainly you do.

And let us not deceive ourselves longer on this point—for, nothing is more true than that America wants to recognize her own in every line and that the real possibilities and greatness of music in this country will not—they cannot—ever be realized except through the full Americanization of the art.

A year ago I spoke from this platform on "The Commercialization of Music" and you were good enough to indorse liberally what was said.

Bits of that address were printed here and there until some of the most important sentences had been repeated in all parts of the country and out of this grew a very definite wish to hear more.

In response to numerous invitations the address—or parts of it, have been repeated in Nebraska, Missouri, Illinois, and Minnesota and everywhere there has been a keen feeling that the keynote of business prosperity for musicians had been struck.

"Nothing for nothing" has been repeated many times and adopted as a slogan by hundreds of professional musicians.

And, I have no hesitation whatever in saying that it ought to be adopted by all musicians of the country, for the big thing that we have lacked is business sense along this line and the one great requirement of the future is that we must see the truth and realize that nothing is more certain than that the public appraises musicians (or indeed any other class of workers) exactly at their own valuation.

If a musician allows the Public to think for one moment that he values his own services so cheaply that he is willing to give them away, just that certain is it that the public considers him thenceforth worth just the value he has placed upon himself—i. e., NOTHING.

. . . . . .

The most frequent objection to the Nothing for Nothing propaganda has been from the musicians who really love to give of themselves to the sick, the lame, the blind and the poverty-stricken as an abstract proposition, and—the war has vastly increased that list.

For—all of us, during the time of the great struggle felt that we must do all we could and the giving of ourselves in song or instrumental music seemed little enough.

And so it was—and so indeed, it is today and will continue to be—for, the unfortunate and the really needy we have with us always and we must needs give of ourselves to them as much as we can.

But even this must be done properly and in order.

It is a fine and beautiful thing to bring music to the patients in a hospital, for instance—but even here we should use business judgment and should seek—by degrees, to influence the Government or those who support the Institutions, to supply money for the payment of those chosen to present the music.

For—has it occurred to you that the Managers and the Secretaries of the various Associations which have music departments are all liberally paid—and, for what, please? To secure you, as an artist, to give your services for nothing in many cases.

And as for the big Charity concerts. You know—of course, that while you often sing or play for nothing the man who owns the hall or the theater in which the concert is given usually receives full pay for its use—the printer is paid for the programs—the ushers are paid, and the florist and the janitor—the electric light company, and all the rest of them—All, in fact, but you.

Therefore, I say—no artist should appear even in a big charity concert without pay unless he is given full assurance that every other factor involved is also furnished absolutely without cost.

And as for any other sort of public work—aside from war camp and hospital, there should be no such thing as appearing for nothing, excepting only in school and studio functions.

As suggested last year, the student should be kept in the studio and the home for his initial appearance—the dilettante should stay out of the public field—the debutante should give an introductory concert at his own expense to which he should invite the managers and those who wish to hear him for the purpose of considering engagements, but none of these classes should ever appear in public performance of any kind without payment for his services.

Since I made the statement a year ago that it was foolish to appear before Clubs and Societies of any description for nothing because nothing but offers of other free appearances ever grew out of these, I have had substantiation of this fact to my heart's content.

Artists—young and old, from all parts of the country, have told me that this is the exact fact in their own experience and that no paying career has ever, to their knowledge, been built up on the prestige growing from free appearances no matter how advantageous these may have seemed at the moment.

"And you can carry your propaganda a lot further," said a teacher to me recently—"and you can say also that the giving of free lessons is just as bad, just as stultifying and just as nonproductive of real results as is the singing or playing in concerts for nothing."

And to this we utter a hearty—"Amen." For, pupils who receive free lessons do not appreciate them any more than the public appreciates an artist who will give his public services for nothing and a pupil who is taught without pay on a mistaken idea of charity all too often turns out to be the one who will, in later years, forget the advantage entirely and give credit for all his achievements to a second teacher to whom he has paid the money he was enabled to make through the efforts of the first.

For, it is human nature the World over to appreciate that which costs money and it is equally human to value but lightly that which can be had for nothing.

Why does the public flock to hear Heifetz or John McCormack, think you? Because they are great artists? Yes indeed—but also, and even more so, because it is known that they receive fabulous sums for their appearances—and the public, the dear public—seeing in imagination the big pile of dollars either will get for his work is feverishly anxious to add more dollars to that pile.

The N. F. M. C. for some years thought it sufficient to offer the distinction of winning honorable mention, with a possibility of accruing engagements, as an incentive to young American artists to compete at the biennial meetings, but now they have learned that a MONEY PRIZE is far preferable and the only practical reward and so—at the meeting held in July at Peterborough, each prize winner was given a goodly sum of money and, to the everlasting credit of A. A. Van De Mark, they were also offered engagements to appear at this meeting of the American Music Festival at Lockport and will do so on next Sunday Afternoon.

In Chicago the Symphony Orchestra is to give a public appearance (with the Orchestra) to the young pianist and violinist who will play best in a coming contest—but, it will be found that interest in the whole matter will be lukewarm unless there is also promised and paid a fee for the appearance which is commensurate with its importance.

When Elman, Levitzki and Heifetz first appeared in Chicago as Symphony soloists they were paid large emoluments, although up to the moment unknown to Chicagoans except through European reputations.

If then, young Americans are found through contest, worthy to be allowed to play with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra at all they should be liberally paid also.

And so it must work throughout the entire circle of music in this country. We must develop through Government assistance the thought and feeling of music in the entire Community—we must Americanize this growth to the fullest possible extent and we must see to it that all professional musicians are paid according to their deserts.

This may involve organization—it might even lead to unionism among all classes of professional musicians—but let us not be afraid to discuss even such unusual and unwonted terms as these—for, we must find the way to full, American musical growth and financial appreciation of the same in this country, let the path lead where it will.

A few days ago I received a letter from a teacher of music at Tampa inclosed with which was a set of resolutions which had been adopted and signed by all the professional musicians of this enterprising Florida city.

These resolutions pledge each signer to the fact that he will not give of his services in a public way for any purpose whatever except for pay, a standard schedule of prices for all occasions being a part of the resolutions.

Exception is made only of the Musicians' Club, which is recognized as being "for mutual relaxation and education," and the reason given by these musicians for their action is that they have their money "invested" in their profession and it must—in these practical times, yield "a decent interest on the investment."

This movement at Tampa is a direct result of the "Nothing for Nothing" propaganda, and it is worthy of the consideration and the emulation of the musicians of every Community.

The city artist should have pay for his every appearance in public and no Society, Club or Organization should consider itself exempt from this obligation and likewise—the teacher, or other professional working in the smallest village should be able to ask a reasonable payment for each time he goes outside his regular schedule of work to serve any individual or any part of the public and the whole music profession should be so knit together and so unanimous in this standard that it can be enforced everywhere.

Let each individual musician pledge himself to the democratic and the Nationalistic idea and let him insist consistently and persistently that the musician is, at all times and in all places, fully worthy of his hire and we shall soon have that happier day when music and its professional makers will be placed in their proper positions in the Community.

The study of music in its cultural aspects—as a part of general education, is a wonderful thing and should be fostered more and more. The making of a big amateur body and of an ever-increasing class of dilettante is equally fine—but, professionalism is quite another thing and involves the most careful consideration of the living problem—the money making possibilities of the art.

So—while we as musicians are more than willing to work for the complete democratization of music—while we will do our utmost to bring it home to all the people and while we will yield to no other class in our enthusiasm for and devotion to Americanization of our work, yet—we realize, too, that the time is now fully ripe when we must become, also—very determined in our stand for our individual commercial rights.

Unless we ourselves insist upon good contracts and adequate payments no one else will help us to these things.

Therefore—I believe that these few, rather disjointed remarks can be closed in no better way than with a repetition of the slogan I gave you last year—one which covers much and may be made to cover all our commercial problems—"Nothing for Nothing."

Mr. Van Dusen has again resumed his teaching at the American Conservatory, with which he has been associated as teacher of piano and organ for a number of years. In addition to the regular schedule of private lessons, Mr. Van Dusen will, as usual, conduct weekly interpretation classes for piano and give a series of lectures on the history of the organ and organ music, beginning in October, and will resume his activities as organist and director of music at the First Universalist Church of Chicago. PARISH WILLIAMS CHARMS PORTLAND AUDIENCE

Parish Williams gave his annual recital in Portland, Ore., on Sunday, August 17, 1919, before a most enthusiastic and appreciative audience.

Mr. Williams' voice is most sympathetic in quality, his tone being true, clear and pure throughout his entire register. He gave groups in Italian, French, Norwegian and English, which covered a great variety of tone color and mode. Mr. Williams lives his songs before him, and succeeds in creating the atmosphere necessary to bring out the composer's message, which makes his programs most interesting from beginning to end.

Mr. Williams will give a recital in Aeolian Hall on October 13 under the management of Loudon Charlton. The following are some of the press comments:

"Parish Williams' voice is beautiful in quality, and his phrasing and diction are above the ordinary.

"The program was skillfully selected, and is significant as being the same program Mr. Williams will use in making his concert debut in Aeolian Hall, New York City, in October. It is a difficult one to render and makes special appeal to the studious. It is not 'popular' in the sense that it might contain noisy airs of the day—for it does not. It is educative and represents many schools of vocalism. The fine rendition it received stamps Mr. Williams as being a concert baritone of distinguished merit."—The Morning Oregonian, Monday, August 18, 1919.

"Parish Williams has resonance and power and yet displays a delicacy and beauty of tone in a marked degree. His pianissimo has the clarity and his scales the fluence of a lyric tenor. He gave utterance to a variety of emotions in the different songs, and did so with conviction. His Scandinavian and French numbers were sung as they can be sung only by a man who really knows the languages, feels the inner thought of the composer, and has the facile power to transmit the message."—The Oregon Daily Journal, Monday, August 18, 1919.

PARISH WILLIAMS

"That Parish Williams, young Portland baritone, has a brilliant future before him in the world of music is the unanimous opinion of the several hundred friends and music lovers who heard him in song recital Sunday afternoon.

"Mr. Williams has not been heard in Portland since the season before last, during which time he has been reviewing his vocal studies in New York. His voice has developed surprisingly in beauty and power; in the delicate passages his voice has a pure lyric quality; in the big numbers he is all dramatic—surely an estimable combination for a concert singer.

"His program, which, by the way, is the one he will give on October 13 in Aeolian Hall, New York, when he makes his initial bow to the New York musical world, is a well-chosen one. It embraces songs in Italian, French, Norwegian and English, many of them seldom heard on the general concert program, and doubly refreshing thereby.

"The numbers were enthusiastically received by the large audience, the singer having to respond to numerous encores before the program could continue."—The Portland Spectator, Saturday, August 23, 1919.

CHICAGO OPERA ASSOCIATION

"La Nave," Montemezzi's latest opera, had its world premiere at La Scala, Milan, last November. When it is given its American premiere by the Chicago Opera Association, Madame Rosa Raisa will create the role of Basiliola.

"La Nave," An Italian Novelty

The Chicago Opera Association has announced as one of its striking Italian novelties "La Nave," a lyric drama in three episodes and a prologue. It is based on a drama in blank verse by Gabrielo d'Annunzio, Italy's greatest poet of the present day. In preparing the libretto for Montemezzi's music, Tito Ricordi was forced to sacrifice three thousand lines, but he succeeded in maintaining the action and the proper development of the tragedy. "La Nave" (The Ship) symbolizes the early struggles and the early successes of the Venetian state.

In its properly dramatic circumference it deals with the passion of the two brothers Gratici for a woman, Basiliola, who remembers that her four brothers have had their eyes plucked out because of their surreptitious dealings with the Greeks. She swears bitter vengeance against the two brothers, who are enemies of her house, and succeeds in playing havoc by means of her own beauty and charm. Sacrilege, sin and fratricide follow in the wake of her passion, but in the end righteousness wins over lust, and the woman pays the penalty of sin, while Venice continues once again on her way towards greatness, opulence and happiness.

Not since the days of Dante has a poet dared to paint a word picture in such luridly somber hues as does d'Annunzio in his "La Nave," and it is not surprising that Montemezzi, whose "Amore dei Tre Re" shows clearly his predilection for the darkly tragic, should have chosen "La Nave" as a libretto for what he believes to be his masterpiece.

As to Our Directory Columns

The name of every Musician in the United States—every Composer, every Manager, every Publisher, every Teacher, every School, and every Manufacturer of Music Instruments, should be in the Classified Directory Columns of THE MUSIC NEWS.

It is a fact today that Managers, Directors of Schools, Program Committees, Festival Directors, Lyceum Promoters—in fact, everybody who has to do with Musicians, has formed the habit, when the address of a Musician is wanted, of looking in our Directory Columns for it.

We have been told again and again,

"Your Directory Is the Most Useful List Published in the United States"

Even if you have no intention of doing more public work—even though you are located where no change seems possible—it is still advisable to have your name in our columns in order that your friends, the managers, the publishers and the public at large may have a ready means of finding your address.

And—if you ARE in the field for increased engagements or activities of any kind you will find no medium so useful as this.

We have Classifications for every Instrument, for the Voice, for Publishers, Manufacturers, Composers, Directors, Ensembles, Theory Teachers, Dancing, Dramatic Art, Clubs, Choir Boy Training, Pageantry, Community Singing Directors, Managers, Accompanists, Public School Music Teachers, and others.

If we have not your Classification we will create a Department for you.

The cost of this service is only fifteen dollars a year, but the service itself is invaluable.

During the last season we carried in the Classified Columns hundreds of names. We want to carry additional hundreds this season, and expect to make the list as near complete as we possibly can.

Payment for this service can be made Annually, Semi-Annually or Quarterly—and, as we send THE MUSIC NEWS to each one whose name is in these columns, you need have no further expense for subscription.

Display Advertising in MUSIC NEWS is considered today the most useful in America, and you will—eventually—be in the field for that. But, meantime, you should not delay one week in having your name in our Classified Directory Columns, for this is AN INVALUABLE SERVICE.

THE LYCEUM ARTS CONSERVATORY

The Lyceum Arts Conservatory gives in its catalogue an outline of its aims and objects.

The purpose of the Lyceum Arts Conservatory has been announced as threefold. In this connection we wish to elaborate upon this object by making a few statements.

We have felt very strongly that musical and dramatic training was not as thorough or as practical as it should be. To correct this has been our chief aim. It is our intention that these arts are a public and not a private asset, that unless one can so express his art as to make it a pleasure to others to hear, it is not true art any more than is the painter or the the sculptor a real artist unless the product of his hand gives pleasure to the eye.

Our effort from the first has been to correct the strange anomaly of hundreds of young people being graduated from the conservatories of the country each year, a majority of whom were desirous of entering upon public concert work, and yet many of them being unable to secure positions; while scores of managers were seeking for qualified musicians and entertainers, and were often unable to find them.

The art of entertaining an audience by an art is a profession in itself, just as electrical engineering is a branch of mechanical engineering, and must be taken up as a distinct study.

The abundant success that has attended our efforts is sufficient proof that there is need for a school of this kind.

Our desire is no less earnest and sincere to prepare young people for the great profession of teaching. To those who are properly trained there is no work that offers a more pleasing or immediate reward. It may be claimed that the financial returns are not as great as in some other vocations, but even if this were proved, it is more than compensated by the superior social and other advantages which are accorded in the most cultivated communities to those who choose this dignified and highly useful profession. Our courses of study are especially designed with this end in view. The special training we offer is essential to successful teaching.

The faculty assembled is well able to obtain the best results in the fulfillment of these purposes. They not only have been thoroughly trained, but have had years of successful experience in teaching and public work.

To those who are ambitious to succeed, who are here for real work and willing to do their part to prepare themselves for an important place in the art world, we can be of great assistance.

We cannot urge upon pupils too strongly the necessity of making thorough preparation before beginning public work. The oft-expressed intention to "return later and finish" is seldom realized. It is better to start later and last longer. This work requires the most careful study. The demands each year are more severe. If you are interested in any of the arts it is our privilege to teach, a careful reading of our prospectus will be of interest to you.

The faculty for the coming year is as follows:

Elias Day, Director

Theodore Harrison, Director Music Department

BUREAU OF FINE ARTS EXPANDS

Jessie B. Hall, founder of the Bureau of Fine Arts, is announcing the admittance to equal partnership of Dema E. Harshbarger, for several years manager of the Century Lyceum Bureau, and removal to larger quarters in Suite 414-416 Fine Arts Building.

Miss Hall has made a brilliant success of the Bureau of Fine Arts, and is making no mistake now in taking as a co-worker Miss Harshbarger, who is equally well known in her line of work.

In addition to the departments already well organized, a department for the organization of companies will be added, made possible by Miss Harshbarger's long experience in that field. Miss Hall will continue her concert management, and the Edgewater Hotel twilight musicales and the Bureau of Fine Arts will assume exclusive management of three artists, Robert Davis, lyric tenor; Robert Clifton Long, baritone, and Robert Macdonald, pianist. Miss Hall has always believed it unfair to exact a sum of money from artists for something which is not delivered, and all of the arrangements made with the Bureau of Fine Arts are on a strictly commission basis, including the exclusive artists.

The Bureau of Fine Arts is in the field for everything that is best in booking—local and road—and the high standard of service to artists and those who seek their services will continue to be maintained.

Associated with the Bureau of Fine Arts as coach and accompanist will be Miss Grace Grove, well known to the music world of Chicago.

Miss Hall, Miss Harshbarger and Miss Grove have issued invitations for a housewarming Tuesday, September 16, in their new studios, and, judging from the advance booking already made in all lines, the season is going to be a very successful one.

Robert Macdonald has already been booked for a number of recitals, including a solid week of club dates in the immediate vicinity of Chicago. He will play in Milwaukee and Evanston this fall, and has been transferred for a twenty weeks' tour under a distinguished eastern manager. Mr. Macdonald and Mr. Long will make a tour in the Northwest in the spring of 1920 also.

Robert Clifton Long is now being booked for club and concert dates and some oratorio dates as well, and the outlook is for a busy season.

Robert Davis, lyric tenor, is a discovery of Miss Hall's. She heard him sing in a minor part in Raymond Hitchcock's company, and, believing he had a most unusual voice, immediately started negotiations for exclusive management. He has a clear lyric tenor voice of phenomenal high range and is most unusual in that he does not aspire to grand opera; he prefers to sing the songs the people love, and makes an immediate appeal to an audience. He opened the Playhouse as the principal soloist, and was held over there some time by popular request. Mr. Davis will be presented some time during the current season in recital and will open the season of Twilight Musicales at the Edgewater Beach Hotel.

The Bureau of Fine Arts has secured the exclusive booking of artists for the Playhouse, and in addition to the engagements secured for their exclusive artists have placed teachers in several fine positions, including Ludwig Schmidt, violinist with the Lyceum Arts Conservatory; Nina Layman, with the Texas Woman's College, Fort Worth, Texas; Arthur Oglesbee, with Lombard College, Galesburg, etc.

Florence Schubert was booked for a recital on the South Side September 7 and in Hinsdale September 8. The Bureau of Fine Arts will supply the program for the opening concert of the Wheaton Club and of the Berwyn Club.

Carl Craven has been booked for a number of club dates early in the fall, and Benjamin Conklin, basso, has been placed for several "Messiah" dates.

KANKAKEE, ILLINOIS

Music was the main attraction of the local chautauqua. In addition to the usual orchestras and bands we were favored with two sessions of entertainment by the Ver Haar Concert Company, directed by Mrs. Swanson Ver Haar of Chicago fame. The other members of the company were Mrs. Lightfall, Stanley Deacon, Eugene Dressler and Stanley Ruzicka, accompanist.

The program, consisting of solos, duets and quartets, was rendered with artistic effect and gratifying simplicity, and drew a large audience, which was emphatic in pronouncing it the most enjoyable and substantial of the entire series. We hope to have the pleasure of hearing them again.

The Metropolitan School was given the privilege of furnishing the program introductory to the lecture of Dr. Gunsaulus. The latter was especially eloquent in his praise of the performance of the Liszt Rhapsody by Mrs. Oscar Hold, which was brilliant and definite, with a generous quota of artistic finish.

The program:

Italian Concerto ..... Bach
Miss Jeannette Peterson
Selected songs .....
Stanley Wilkinson
Adoration (violin) ..... Borowski
Kenneth Rayer
Rhapsody No. 14 ..... Liszt
Mrs. Oscar Hold Accompanist, Helen Hawk.

Miss Nelda Lueth, the city's most popular soprano, was also a soloist on another day of the chautauqua and achieved her usual success, receiving enthusiastic appreciation and applause from the audience.

CHICAGO SCHOOL OF EXPRESSION AND DRAMATIC ART

Letitia Kempster Barnum, president of the Chicago School of Expression and Dramatic Art, makes the following announcement for the coming season for her own school in the Fine Arts Building:

This school is perfectly equipped for teaching all courses outlined and is unsurpassed in such instruction. In addition to the extensive courses mentioned in the catalogue are added the following:

In Expression.—Marguerite Marlowe Callender is a graduate of the Chicago School of Expression and Dramatic Art. She has been particularly interested in child study and has had experience and marked success in conducting children's classes, coaching and directing children's plays.

LETITIA KEMPSTER BARNUM

America's Evolution.—Mrs. Marian A. White, author and lecturer, will deliver a course of talks on America's historic records, traditions and legends in their relation to the vital issues of today. Mrs. White brings to her work a wealth of enthusiasm. Her association from childhood with distinguished authors, artists and statesmen gives her personal reminiscences and anecdotes which never fail to charm. Extended travel on two continents has broadened her vision and understanding. She is an accomplished and forceful speaker.

French Language.—Professor Leon Aubel, a native Parisian and graduate of the University of Paris, has been teaching French literature in Chicago for twenty years. Professor Aubel is one of the best known pedagogues and most successful teachers in America. He will make a specialty of preparing students for college and university.

Whistling.—A unique department of the school is that conducted by Mrs. Jessie Braman Daggett, who teaches whistling. Mrs. Daggett is the possessor of a singularly sweet whistle, which she has cultivated to the degree of a rare accomplishment. She is well known as a bird imitator, and her lecture programs illustrating bird song are in great demand because of their entertaining and instructive nature.

Physical Training.—Miss Gertrude Jeanette Polk will conduct the department of physical training. This department includes calisthenics, rhythmic and dramatic gestures, studies in pantomime and the picturesque pantomime dances. Miss Polk is a thoroughly qualified teacher. In addition to being a pupil of Ruth St. Denis, Antonio de Balboa and other famous dancers and pantomimists, she has studied the related arts—music and drama—with the best teachers of this country and abroad. Believing that it is only through the freedom and control of the body that the spirit and emotions can be beautifully expressed, Miss Polk gives the pupil a thorough training which establishes co-ordination and harmony between body and mind.

Dancing Department.—Conducted by Marie Veatch. Dancing is an art. In its highest form dancing expresses comprehension and appreciation of dramatic interpretation. The study of dancing develops the power of concentration and perfect co-ordination of mind and body with resulting poise.

Those desiring a professional career, whether in the field of drama, music, or public speaking, will find an opportunity through this study for both mental and physical development.

From an experience of several years with junior and adult pupils Miss Veatch has evolved a method which accomplishes a result not only of brilliant performance but of sincere and thorough foundation.

Miss Veatch embodies in her instruction what is best of the methods of the following well-known teachers: Louis Chalif, Vestoff and Serova, the Castle School (graduate), New York; Mme. Cook, Mary Wood Hinman, Kate Simmons, and Andreas Pavley of Chicago, with whom she has studied. She has received special dramatic training from Letitia V. Barnum.

Dramatic, interpretative, stage, clog, toe, character and national dances are included in the instruction given, as well as some of the principles embodied in the teaching of Isadora Duncan. Ball-room dancing, with its latest innovations, is also taught. Attention is given to the individual pupil in the selection of costumes and setting, thus assuring an artistic and finished performance. Exclusive and original numbers supplied. Programs and novelty dances arranged for professionals. Costumes for public performances.

Social Matinees.—A delightful feature of the school season will be the studio teas to be given on the first Saturday afternoon of each month. On these occasions students and friends of the school will be given an opportunity to meet persons distinguished in the arts and other cultural pursuits. Informal programs will be given in which the advanced pupils will sometimes take part. The studio of the president, Mrs. Barnum, offers a charming setting for these social matinees. They are to be distinctive and entertaining in character. Mrs. Natalie Whited Price, who is in charge of the department of social efficiency, will act as hostess, assisted by other members of the faculty.

School Calendar.—The regular school year consists of four terms of ten weeks each:

1. Monday, Sept. 8, to Saturday, Nov. 15.
2. Monday, Nov. 17, to Saturday, Jan. 31.
3. Monday, Feb. 2, to Saturday, April 10.
4. Monday, April 12, to Saturday, June 19.

Summer normal course, June 21 to July 24. Christmas vacation, Dec. 22 to Dec. 27. Registration week from Sept. 1 to 6.

Students may register at any time during the year.

Faculty.—Letitia Kempster Barnum, Bertha L. Iles, Margarette Lois Redfield, Bozena Gueldner, Kate Pentzer Stokes, Frankie E. Swaim, Leona Covey, Marguerite Marlowe Callender, Gertrude J. Polk, Marie Veatch, Jessie Braman Daggett, Marian A. White, Natalie Whitted Price, Leon Aubel.

Lydia Earle Whitted, registrar.

AUDITORIUM CONSERVATORY

The Auditorium Conservatory, Karl B. Stein, Mus. Doc., president, opened Monday, September 8, with fine prospects for the coming year. The violin department has been completely reorganized, two piano teachers have been added to the faculty, and various other improvements made in the school. Mr. and Mrs. Stein plan to give two complete opera performances this year—one grand and one comic opera, besides the numerous studio and recital hall programs. Alice Brown Stout, the well-known vocalist, pianist and composer, has but recently returned from a several weeks' motor trip through the East, and while there gave numerous programs before distinguished musicians and society folks.

Mrs. Stout has just completed four songs, entitled "In Flanders' Fields," "Snowflakes," "When Stars Are in the Quiet Skies," and "Spring Delight," and is now negotiating with an eastern firm for their publication. The songs are dedicated to Florence Hinkle, who was so pleased with them that she has announced her intention of using same on her programs for next season.

VOICE PRODUCTION WITHOUT "INTERFERENCE"

A Method of Voice Development Which Permits Full and Natural Production of Tone, Unhampered by Artificial Restraint

By WILLIAM A. C. ZERFFI IN MUSICAL COURIER

It is impossible to teach a person how to produce a vocal tone. The very most that can be done is to point out how a tone should not be produced.

Hitherto, practically all investigations of the voice have been directed toward the discovery of the correct method of producing tone, not toward the discovery of what interferes with the correct production of tone. Herein lies the key to the whole situation.

The first point to consider is that the action of the vocal cords is automatic, that is to say, it cannot be controlled other than by thought. When we sing a tone, we are entirely unconscious of the adjustments which take place in the larynx in order to produce the tone we wish to sing. We are unable by any conscious act to influence the action of the vocal cords. Their action is controlled subconsciously. This fact is of supreme importance, and must always be borne in mind.

All normal vocal organs are capable of producing tone, the quality of the tone produced depending chiefly upon the freedom of action of the vocal organ. The problem of voice production, therefore, resolves itself into a search for the source of interference with the naturally correct action of the vocal organ.

Part of the vocal tract (mouth and pharynx) serves a double purpose, being used for swallowing as well as singing or speaking. During the process of swallowing the larynx is completely closed and an attempt at tone production manifestly impossible. (Anyone who has accidentally laughed while swallowing will readily admit this.) The reverse of this is also true; during the emission of tone, any attempt to swallow is impossible.

From this may be inferred that the two acts of swallowing and singing are directly opposed, and cannot be performed at one and the same time. Furthermore, the muscles which we use when swallowing are consciously controlled, while the action of the vocal organ is always subconscious. We have, therefore, two groups of muscles acting in direct opposition to one another, each group dependent on the relaxation of the other in order to perform its work properly. It is necessary while producing tone to absolutely relax the swallowing muscles, and the failure to do this is responsible for all faulty tone production. The contraction of the swallowing muscles during the emission of tone constitutes an "interference" with the free action of the vocal organ.

There are various ways in which this interference affects the voice. The contraction of the muscles of the tongue, which are directly attached to the larynx, makes it impossible for the vocal cords to adjust themselves to the changes of pitch required, both as regards high and low tones. This limits the range of the voice and makes the singing of high tones only possible with great effort. This effort naturally increases the amount of breath required, and by forcing a large quantity of breath in and out of the body, much energy is uselessly expended. By the contraction of the muscles of the soft palate, the tone is prevented from receiving its proper resonance, with the result that it becomes poor in quality and lacks volume.

That singing under conditions such as are described above can never be productive of satisfactory results can readily be seen. An attempt to sing degenerates into a battle between the two groups of muscles, and as the swallowing muscles are by far the more powerful, the vocal muscles become finally so weakened as to hardly permit of tone production at all.

The results of singing with "interference" may be summed up as follows:

1. By preventing the larynx from making the necessary muscular adjustments, the vocal muscles are weakened and their development impeded.

2. By depriving the tone of its proper resonance (re-enforcement) the vocal cords are constantly overstrained in the effort to produce an adequate volume of tone.

3. By the rigidity of tongue and soft palate, satisfactory articulation becomes extremely difficult.

In short, "interference" is responsible for all the various and many troubles which assail the singer, and that it is only after the singer has learned to relax these "interfering" muscles that a rational development of the voice becomes possible.

It may be stated here that only at first is a conscious relaxation of the swallowing muscles necessary; very soon the impulses to contract these muscles cease, and the voice is free to respond to the every wish of the singer.

Once the voice is freed from "interference," quality, range and power are a matter of development, and are bounded only by the naturally very wide limits of the voice. Articulation in any language becomes easily possible, in fact it is hard to put a limit to what can be accomplished by the careful development of the voice along the lines indicated, of "Voice Production Without Interference."

THE KNUPFER STUDIOS

The Knupfer Studios, School of Music and Dramatic Art, under the direction of Walter Knupfer, announces the opening of the school year 1919-1920. Mr. Knupfer has made several important additions to his faculty, among them Alexander Zukowski, Director of the Violin Department; Ernest Knoch, Director of the Vocal Department for Opera; David Baxter, the famous Scotch basso, who will be at the head of the Voice Department; Lyravine Votaw, who will conduct the classes in Public School Music, and Gertrude Hemken, who assumes the directorship of the newly organized School of Dramatic Art.

Other instructors of note who will join the faculty are Christian Jordan and Mollye Friedman, in the Piano Department; Walter van Winckler-Graham, Jane Ogden Hunter, Alice Nielsen Baxter in the Vocal Department.

PUBLIC SCHOOL MUSIC

By LYRAVINE VOTAW

Schools and Schools, With Teachers and No Teachers

It is truly an inspiration to come in contact with educators in all departments of our school and college and university systems.

Very few teachers in the schools of our great cities fully realize the intense pressure which is being brought to bear upon the school systems of the smaller cities and of the rural communities for a higher standard of educational conditions.

It is undeniably one of the most encouraging features of our day—is this close scrutiny and self-examination of the schools and the teaching body.

There seems at present as the school season opens something of unrest and a general tossing about. One county in Illinois had, just two days before beginning school, ten rural schools without a teacher to open its doors.

The consolidation of the rural schools is solving this problem to a large degree. It should not be permissible to go to the expense of keeping a school running for only four pupils, but such things still exist. Raising of teachers' salaries will help to a certain extent, for it is true that many good teachers have gone into more lucrative lines of work.

Nevertheless, the educational field will always hold an enormous attraction for those who are deeply interested in young life as it develops, and in those educational problems which hold so much of fascination to a real educator.

To those of us especially interested in the music of the public schools it is intensely satisfying to note the increased interest in music in the smaller cities not only but in the consolidated and one-room rural schools as well.

The materials fitted to these schools is more general among publishers of text books and the teachers themselves are better prepared to instruct.

My experience for several summer seasons passed with teachers of the smaller schools in our country has proven to me that in the majority of cases they are not one whit behind our larger school systems in the subject of music, and they are constantly eager for the best and newest methods in imparting musical subjects.

A Sacred Spot

At Crawfordsville, Ind., is a lot not far from the business center of town, entirely surrounded by a brick wall, with neat stone trimmings. Above the high wall from outside can be seen only tall, stately trees. A large gate, closely locked, makes one sure of a valuable treasure guarded within.

During certain hours of the day this gate is thrown open to the public, for all interested may enter without fee; all visitors are welcomed as guests. As high as 700 guests have entered those walls in a day.

Inside the gates, one wanders up a gravel walk, across the lawn and stands face to face with a statue of the author of "Ben Hur," one of the greatest novels this world has ever known.

General Lew Wallace a few years before his death in 1905 erected a study which is now used as a memorial, holding a great many interesting mementoes associated with him and his family.

The building was planned and its erection superintended by General Wallace personally. The frieze is sculptured to represent characters from his works. The premises are owned and maintained by the Wallace family.

The bronze statue of General Wallace west of the study was cast in Paris from the model made for the Carrara marble statue by Andrew O'Connor, presented to the United States Congress by the State of Indiana for the Hall of Fame in the United States Capitol at Washington.

These are all cold facts—mere facts, that are interesting to know, but which do not in the least carry with them the atmosphere which pervades that study. The domed ceiling, the manuscripts, the translated volumes in sixty languages, the paintings on the walls, some of them by the brush of the general; all of these entered into the sensation of reverence, no doubt.

Near the fireplace where his more personal belongings were placed stood a chest made by him, in which reposed two old violins, a third was placed against the wall with Mrs. Wallace's guitar.

Nothing in that study, many of them things of world-wide renown, gave me the same little weird sensation about the heart that I experienced in gazing upon those violins. There were spaces for four violins in that chest made by his own hands.

They spoke to me in more vibrant terms of that inner life than did his wonderful novel, which I read until 2 a. m. because I could not put it down—at the first reading.

Those violins no doubt many a time poured forth emotions which that great soul could not put into words, but the world never heard them.

When I stood there before that chest of silent instruments I felt as though I were almost before the great white throne, but when the guard threw open a heavy pair of doors and said, "You must see this view," I was speechless. The doors opened upon a stone porch—coverless, excepting where the huge branches of the near-by trees bent over as if guarding its sacredness.

As far as eyes could penetrate there were only trees. One wonderful silver birch that was losing its hold and slipping into the beyond.

Imaginations, fancies, inspirations, all would have room—room—room! That was my thought, and, oh! what a spot in which to dream and compose!

I felt as though even one so prosaic as I might be inspired in such a spot.

No wonder "The MacDowell Colony" and other similar spots breed composers!

America needs many more composers, but if you want the thrill that inspires get out where your wings can fly! Chicago is not the place.

CHICAGO OPERA ASSOCIATION

The coming season of the Chicago Opera Association will be remarkable for its array of new scenic artists. It will be great not only from the point of view of artists and operas. There will be several marvelously rich and interesting new productions. Boris Anisfeld, Peter J. Donigan, Norman-Bel Geddes, Robert Edmond Jones and Hermann Rosse are the five distinguished artists on whom Maestro Campanini may depend for wonderful results.

Boris Anisfeld is looked upon in Russia as the one great rival of Bakst. His work is similar and yet has a distinct individuality of its own. It is less striking, perhaps, but on the other hand is more delicate in its appeal. His production here of Serge Prokofieff's fantastic magical opera is awaited with great interest. Anisfeld escaped from Russia about one year ago and came over to this country with his wife by way of Japan. He has just completed the new production of "L'Oiseau Bleu" ("The Blue Bird") for the Metropolitan. Two of his best productions, made known to America by Pavlowa, have been "Les Preludes de Liszt" and the "Seven Princesses."

Peter J. Donigan is a Chicago boy and has been with the Chicago Opera Company seven years. He has to his credit many productions such as "Isabeau," "Monna Vanna," "Francesca da Rimini," "Dinorah," "Lakme," "Griselidis," and two acts of "Cleopatra," "Don Pasquale," "Gismonda," "The Masked Ball," "Norma." This year he will make the production of "Rip Van Winkle," "Aphrodite" and the three Puccini operas, "Il Tabarro," "Suor Angelica" and "Gianni Schicchi."

Norman-Bel Geddes, a distinguished representative of the new American talent which is coming to the fore, will make three productions for the Chicago Opera this season: "La Nave," the new Italian opera by Italo Montemezzi; "Jacquerie," the new opera by Gino Marinuzzi, the new principal conductor, and Felix Borowski's new ballet pantomime, "Boudour." Mr. Geddes has a quick, alert personality. He is keenly sensitive and artistic and yet is practical in his conceptions. He knows all about the stage, having been a moving picture director three years, and having made no less than sixteen productions last year, including "The Century Whirl," two productions for Brady, "Papa" and "Nju."

Robert Edmond Jones is considered by many as the American Wizard in light and costume effects. He has shown great fantasy and imagination, and has won wide recognition with the recent productions of "The Jest" and "Redemption" in which John and Lionel Barrymore appeared. Another one of his achievements was the extraordinary spectacle of Caliban at the Harvard Stadium in 1910, where a special 30,000 outdoor theater was constructed, with a dome sixty feet high, on which visions could be cast by means of lights.

Herman Rosse, head of the design department at the School of the Chicago Art Institute, will provide the new production of Messager's French Opera, "Madame Chrysantheme." Mr. Rosse spent the year 1910 studying theaters in the Orient, and his observation of the Japanese, Chinese and Javanese art has fitted him in an exceptional way for his work on this new production.

SALVATION ARMY DRIVE COMING

The violin was the first instrument used by the Salvation Army in its meetings. No one remembers the name of the fiddler who got a few other fiddlers together in the early Whitechapel days and helped with the singing. A little later, at the first corps opened by the Army away from the east end of London, a convert was sitting in the gallery at a holiday meeting and had his cornet with him. General Booth, who was conducting the meeting, noticed the man, sent for him to come to the platform and asked him to play. The effect on the singing was so satisfactory that the cornet became then and there a part of the Salvation Army music.

There was some opposition. The brass seemed to have a large share in giving the Army a reputation for noisiness, but, on the other hand, it attracted the very people the Army was trying to reach, and very soon after the advent of the cornet a man and his sons who played various brass instruments were invited to go with the General to a few special meetings, with the result that the Salvation Army Band became not only an integral part of the organization but one of its most valuable assets. The Salvation Army music has had a large share in the work of the organization. Its members, none of whom ever had much money to spare, have made sacrifices in order to purchase instruments.

Nels Halling, who plays first alto in the Army Staff Band and is the leader of the Salvation Army No. 5 Boys' Band, which he organized with a half dozen little street urchins four years ago, never has had a cent for his instruments, either from the public or from the boys themselves. He has purchased them at pawnshops with money he earned working nights and has sometimes done extra work for which he received old instruments in payment. There now are forty-seven members of this band, and it is short twenty-five instruments.

During all the years of its existence the Salvation Army has marched blithely to the music of such bands as could be mustered, making up in enthusiasm and sincerity what it lacked in the things money could buy. It has drummed up crowds on the street corners and smiled its cheerful gratitude for the little coins dropped into its tambourines, and spent the time it begrudged from its service to the poor and discouraged in begging small amounts.

But when its war service brought a glare of publicity that multiplied the demands upon its ministrations it became necessary to finance its affairs in a different manner, and a nation-wide campaign for funds for its home service was launched.

The Home Service Campaign in Illinois will be waged September 22 to 29 for $2,250,000, of which Chicago's share is $1,500,000.

Francis S. Peabody, who has been a friend of the Salvation Army for many years, is chairman of both the state and city committees. E. D. Hulbert is treasurer, and others serving on both committees are: J. Ogden Armour, F. H. Bartlett, Herman H. Hettler, D. F. Kelly, Henry H. Kennedy, Lewis E. Myers, Simon O'Donnell, Eugene S. Pike, Roger C. Sullivan, Louis F. Swift, H. H. Taylor, Frank O. Wetmore, William Wrigley Jr. and Charles H. Wacker.

Additional members of the Chicago committee are: A. G. Becker, Ernest Byfield, P. R. Clarke, R. F. Clinch, Richmond Dean, John V. Farwell, F. A. Fowler, William Francis, John J. Garrity, A. D. Lacker, H. H. Merrick, F. W. Moore, James Simpson, William J. Sinek, William A. Tilden, W. P. Warren, Major-General Leonard Wood.

Others on the state committee are: Stanley Field, Winthrop Ingersoll of Rockford, F. G. Adamson of Aurora, L. N. Wiggins of Springfield, Charles Boeschenstein of Edwardsville, Mrs. Howard T. Willson of Virden, Webster H. Rapp, Ira C. Copley of Aurora, and William Butterworth of Moline.

I aim to depict the typical scenes enacted at the Brooklyn Academy on the evening of August 30. The Italian Lyric Federation, whose president is Alfredo Salmaggi, editor of the Italian-American Musical Weekly and a vocal teacher, arranged a performance of the operas "Cavalleria" and "Pagliacci."

There was a large audience, which applauded, laughed and amused itself. Carlo Peroni, the conductor, is a man of ability. Roda Marzio, a debutante, sang Santuzza. Romeo Boscacci, who sang Turiddu, acquitted himself as in past performances. G. Puliti was Alfio.

I had hoped for a better "Pagliacci." Eva Leoni was Nedda. A. Antola was the Tonio. G. Interrante as Silvio was the only one in the cast whose quality was in evidence. The chorus sang.

The scenery was the best feature. It came from the San Carlo Opera Company.

Such is the record of this performance.

Hanna Butler Sings at the People's Liberty Chorus

Immediately after her arrival in New York, the charming Chicago soprano received the invitation to sing at the People's Liberty Chorus, which she accepted. It was on the occasion of a social evening, which took place on September 4th at the High School of Commerce, 155 West 65th street. This meeting of the chorus was the first of a series of monthly seances this winter. The chorus was conducted by L. Camillieri.

A Musical Tribute to Mayor Hylan

Grateful for Mayor Hylan's efforts towards music for the masses, a committee of prominent musical, political and military personages, under the invitation of Park Commissioner Galatin of the New York board, gave a musical festival at the Mall of Central Park on the evening of September 4th. It was attended by thousands of eager music lovers.

The following participated in the musical program: The Police Band, under the leadership of Patrolman Cave; the chorus of the Metropolitan Opera, under the direction of William Tyroller; Rosa Ponselle, soprano; Della Baker, soprano; Riccardo Stracciari, baritone. "La Gioconda," "Trovatore," "La Wally," "The Barber of Seville," "The Mad Scene From Lucia," Charmant Oiseau from "Les Perles de Brezil," and the "Star-Spangled Banner" were rendered by the respective artists.

At the piano were Maestro Romani Romano and Cesare Sturani.

Idelle Patterson and Olga Carrara Close the Stadium Season

On Labor Day Idelle Patterson, soprano, and in the evening Olga Carrara, soprano, were the soloists at the Stadium concerts. The season came to a conclusion after a run of eight weeks. Miss Patterson appeared more often with Arnold Volpe's orchestra than any other artist. She has to her record eleven appearances with the Stadium Orchestra. This is an unusual tribute bestowed upon a vocalist. The reason can be easily surmised. Her voice, her artistry and her personality have contributed to her popularity. At the matinee concert she was in splendid trim, exhibiting again her superb natural timbre of the lyric soprano. In the evening Olga Carrara sang "Voilo Sapete," from "Cavalleria," and two other songs, with excellent results.

Of the newcomers Mme. Carrara can be easily detached as the most conspicuous artist of the season. She made in all four appearances and each time confirmed the impression that she has a beautiful voice. After the performance a banquet was tendered to Arnold Volpe.

HUGO RIESENFELD, THE CONDUCTOR

That grand old man, Oscar Hammerstein, had three dear predilections: His cigar, his opera and his humor. Your serious face would metamorphose your disposition by his extemporaneous humor; through the fumes and the puffs of his inseparable cigar he would scrutinize you. His piercing eye taught to define a man's or a woman's artistic qualifications. Hugo Riesenfeld, the present musical director and general manager of the Rivoli and Rialto Theaters, was Oscar's choice. On a trip to Vienna for finds, he discovered Riesenfeld. The Manhattan of the famous and thrilling days was enriched by the engagement of Mr. Riesenfeld, its assistant conductor. Those who were engulfed in the old house of Thirty-fourth and Eighth avenue will remember that the present musical director of the famous movie houses was practically the "largo al factotum" in the artistic surroundings of the Manhattan. Rehearsals, coaching and conducting were the preoccupations of this young magician. No one recognized the high abilities of Mr. Riesenfeld as the grand old man, and very seldom did Oscar err in his judgment.

If you enter the precincts of the Rivoli and Rialto Theaters, the orchestras imbue you with the atmosphere of the legitimate concert halls. You may profess a disappointment as far as the insipid movies are concerned, but you can not be disillusioned about the musical programs. Mr. Riesenfeld can claim the honor of having helped place the movie houses on an artistic pedestal. New enterprises and the present rivals have followed his musical ideas.

Mr. Riesenfeld built up the Rialto Symphony Orchestra. The players at the Forty-second street house respond to his baton. He is young, in the thirties, but his baton is certain. He has the vigor, the energy and the animation of the leader whose aim is to conduct music for art's sake. He is a fine program maker, versatile and routined. The orchestra under his leadership plays well. He is also a gifted composer. Just now he is at work on a musical comedy, or light opera. We suspect his musical gifts, his melodious inspirations, for which the Viennese are known to be famous.

When you are in the metropolis, go into the Rialto, if not for the movies, for the orchestra programs. JOSEPH DE VALDOR.

Lockport, N. Y.

The National American Music Festival opened its doors for the fourth season yesterday morning in the Thurston Auditorium. When one looks back to the chrysalis of 1916, and then views the splendid proportions into which this enterprise has grown, there is certainly encouragement to the faint-hearted and inspiration to those who are blazing a path along the way that leads to a great goal, that of overwhelming ultimate success of a festival of purely American music given by American artists alone.

The session opened with the singing of "America," after which the Rev. D. Hodson Lewis gave the invocation. Owing to the accident which befell Mrs. Spalding Evans, her beautiful tribute to "The Music of America," a tribute filled with the poetic imagery and living truth underlying all lines from her pen, was impressively read by Professor Carl Wachter of the University of Buffalo. The informal chairman of the morning, Charles W. Moss, expressed the regret of all at Mrs. Spalding Evans' absence, and suggested that one of the masses of flowers which decorated the stage should be sent to her as proof of the universal sympathy of all in attendance.

Mr. Moss struck a happy and tuneful opening note in his clever and cordial address of welcome, which included everybody, performers and public alike. Interlacing his speech with apt and amusing stories, he also spoke with convincing earnestness of his faith in this great festival undertaking. He referred to the fact that the world war has forever justified the hearty encouragement of music, for it was music, above all else, that enabled our boys to "carry on." He paid tribute to Mr. Van de Mark as the one man whose vision and energy brought into existence an enterprise now enlisting the sympathetic interest and talent of many of the greatest artists of this country, and expressed the hope that it would not be long before a permanent home for the American Music Festival should be established in Lockport. Spontaneous and prolonged applause showed how his words found favor in the hearts of his hearers.

Leonard Liebling responded to the address of welcome in his usual witty and happy fashion. His talk was an effective mingling of seriousness and humor, and through it all stood out the speaker's abiding conviction that America is the land of great possibilities in art as in everything else. "We have ideals," said Mr. Liebling, "both poetic and practical, ideals of immense magnitude, which means the creation of big things in art as well as in industries." He mentioned with pleasure the increased interest shown by the business men of this city, by their co-operation not only in spirit but in pocketbook, for it is money which makes art possible. He referred to the festivals held for decades in small German cities, for the special performance of new musical works, and hinted that Lockport might become a world music center in this respect. He made the valuable suggestion that composers should write works dedicated to the American National Music Festival, works to be tried out here and their worth to be judged after adequate performance. Mr. Liebling has carried out this idea in the trio, "Serenade," which will be heard on Wednesday evening. Incidentally he made graceful reference to the sorrow of all at Mrs. Evans' enforced absence and spoke a few words of heartfelt welcome back to her native land, after overseas service, to the universal favorite, Bessie Bown Ricker.—Lockport (N. Y.) Union-Sun and Journal.

Artist Must Not Value Services Too Cheaply, Says Editor of Music News

Tuesday morning's session was a roundtable on the voice, with a paper on "Diction" by Adele L. Baldwin, New York, and an address, "What Next?" by Charles E. Watt, Chicago. Yeatman Griffith, chairman, being delayed in arrival, his place was filled by Mme. Katharine Evans von Klenner, whose clever handling of the unexpected situation aroused much admiration. Mrs. Baldwin probed with skill and knowledge to the core of incorrect diction, and prescribed the cure, proper control of the organs of the respiration, speech and tone. "Who knows how to breathe and to speak well, knows how to sing," she quoted from an old authority, and she rightly stated that everyone should be able to speak distinctly, correctly and beautifully. She illustrated in speech and song the principles of beautiful diction which she so intelligently advocates.

In "What Next?" Mr. Watt touched upon the different conditions along all lines which have resulted from the war, and suggested how best music could adjust itself to the new order of things. It is Mr. Watt's belief that the three elements most essential to the largest development of music in this country are democratization, Americanization and more logical commercialism. Under the first head he classed community singing, civic concerts, music in the schools and similar things which will make more general the love and knowledge of music. Prisons, hospitals and reformatories should have a government to promote music for their inmates. The Americanization of music has suffered from subserviences to foreign influence, which is partly the fault of musicians, teachers and critics who are loath to admit that there can be any musical atmosphere in this country, and from whom the public takes its cue. Instead, they should call attention to the best in American music. The attitude of critics should be neither lukewarm nor antagonistic, as was the case when Josef Hofmann last season gave a piano recital entirely of American composition in New York and Boston. In the case of grand opera, we should imitate France and Italy, who give first place to their own operatic works, in the mother tongue, and with native artists; then will the Americanization of grand opera become a possibility.

As to his last essential, Mr. Watt reiterated still more forcibly some of the things he said last season. His apt phrase, "Nothing for nothing," has become a slogan for musicians in many states. The public takes anyone at his own valuation, and if a musician gives his talent too cheaply he has injured not alone himself, but his colleagues. Except for a real charity, let the laborer in music's field be as worthy of hire as in other fields.—Mary M. D. Howard in Lockport (N. Y.) Union-Sun and Journal.

Eddy Returns to Chicago

After an absence of several years Clarence Eddy returned to Chicago for the Summer, and in addition to his term of teaching at the Chicago Musical College was booked for a number of recitals in and near the city, where organ lovers took the opportunity of his presence to hear him play. Mr. Eddy arrived in Chicago June 20 from his home at San Francisco.

To write anything about Clarence Eddy for Diapason readers seems superfluous. In fact, the idea reminds us of the story of the German newspaper published in Chicago some years ago. One Sunday afternoon there was a spectacular fire across the street from the office of the paper. The next morning all the newspapers had their front pages filled with the story. But not a line was in the German publication. The proprietor arrived at his office hotter than the fire of the preceding day.

"Why nothing on the big fire?" he shouted at the city editor.

"Why, the whole town was down to see it," was that functionary's answer, "and they know all about it. Why write about it?"

There are numerous distinguished services which in his long career Mr. Eddy has rendered the organists of America, but for none do they owe him more than for his consistent presentation of the works of American composers before his audiences. His programs are ever new and he scrutinizes and utilizes more of the latest works of merit than anyone else in his field. Many of the best concert pieces of the present day were recognized as valuable and first played in concert by Clarence Eddy.

Mr. Eddy gave a number of recitals on his way to Chicago. June 13 he played at Sheridan, Wyo.; June 17, Emporia, Kan., and June 19, Topeka. June 22 he gave two recitals in the First Methodist Church at Aurora, Ill. June 24 he played twice in the college hall at Adrian, Mich., and June 26 at Moline. August 1 Mr. Eddy gave a recital on the large organ in Leon Mandel Hall at the University of Chicago. His engagement at the Chicago Musical College began June 30 and ended August 9.

Although it was midsummer Mr. Eddy made a record of eight recitals in a week immediately after his arrival in Chicago.—The Diapason.

stant attendants at Lockport Festivals, there can be included in this the Management and the Speakers, as well as the Composers and the Artists.

Many points of management have been vitally improved, even since last year, and as for the Speakers, they have certainly developed greatly also.

Mr. Liebling of the Courier, for instance, is a very decided growth this year over what he was two years ago.

One of the most characteristic differences between Lockport and the usual State Convention (besides its truly American aspect) lies in the audiences which twice a day fill the Auditorium.

There is here, as everywhere, a certain amount of "mutual admiration" among artists, a development which is always open to a question of sincerity, and there is also some "hero worship," but, on the whole, the audience is not only large, but dispassionate.

In but few cases does this audience convene because of big names or of undue advertising of a personality.

On the contrary, it comes because it has season tickets and is vitally interested in the American Festival idea.

The result is, therefore, that the young artist who appears here is very much on his merit.

If he receives applause only from his colleagues and the little coteries who know him personally, he may be sure that there is something wrong with him.

If, on the contrary, the applause is spontaneous and full, he may rest assured that his work has the real tang which makes it worth presenting to the public.

Again we say Lockport is the melting pot of Music in America, as well as the royal opportunity for Composer and performer alike.

Those who heard Myrtle June McAteer, cellist (Pittsburgh), last year were sorry to learn of the automobile accident of which she was a victim, en route to Lockport, by which she suffered a dislocated arm and could not appear at the Festival. Miss McAteer, by the way, was a pupil of Hans Hess of Chicago.

Sympathy also went out to Harriet Case, soprano, who could not fulfill her Lockport engagement because of the death of her father. Miss Case made many friends last year and she will be heartily welcomed next fall.

Visitors at the Festival were so numerous as to make notation difficult. A few of those recalled, aside from composers whose works were on the programs and managers of different artists, were Yeatman Griffith, New York; Mr. Prieaux (Ditson), Miss Joseph (Witmark's), Emma Gerhardt, sister of Frederica Gerhardt Downing; Florence French (Musical Leader), Mr. Swaab (Musical America), Mrs. Charles E. Watt, Chicago; Mrs. Charles Kenworthy, Buffalo; Mrs. Will Kenworthy, Buffalo; Miss Amanda Vierheller, Pittsburgh; Mrs. Charlotte Babcock, New York.

Mrs. E. D. Bevitt, formerly of Jamestown, N. Y., and well known in Chicago, has just taken up her residence in Lockport, and did splendid service throughout the Festival as accompanist for many young artists and on the general reception committee, which comprised, as usual, pretty nearly all of Lockport.

MAY PETERSON

May Peterson, soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, quite unexpectedly had two appearances in Ocean Grove instead of one! After her tremendous success at the Auditorium there she was requested to stay over and sing at the large Tabernacle the following morning. This she did, and an audience of 3,000 turned out to hear "The Golden Girl of the Metropolitan." Her success then, as the night before, was phenomenal, and so enthusiastic was her audience that they gave her the Methodist salute and demanded more than twice the number of songs scheduled for her to sing.

EDWARD F. JOHNSTON

Born in Scotland in 1879. Became a pupil of the Royal Academy of Music, London, at the age of ten, afterwards studying for a time at the Conservatory in Florence, Italy. Later, he settled in Edinburgh, as an organist and teacher, where he also produced a lyric opera, "Cinderella," with much success. Mr. Johnston made a visit to the United States early in 1907, and while here was engaged as organist for the Jamestown Exposition, held in that year. After this engagement he accepted a position at the Emma Willard Conservatory, in Troy, N. Y., also becoming the organist at St. John's (P. E.) Church in that city. In 1910 Mr. Johnston was appointed organist and lecturer on harmony at Cornell University.

In New York City Mr. Johnston was first organist of Calvary Baptist Church, and at the time of his death engaged at the Madison Avenue Baptist Church.

As a movie organist Mr. Johnston was considered one of the best in the business, and in succession was engaged at the Rialto and Broadway Theaters, and was to start in, after completion, at the Capitol.

Edward F. Johnston, as a composer, won considerable fame, his name first coming into prominence as the result of the great popularity his "Evensong" enjoyed, a composition which is well known to every organist in the country. Many of his other organ compositions, such as "Resurrection Morn," "Midsummer Caprice," etc., have become standard numbers. His operettas, written chiefly for amateur organizations, entitled "The Drum-Major," "Pocahontas," "O Hara San," are known from coast to coast. On the eve of his removal to St. Vincent's Hospital, where he died September 4, Mr. Johnston put the finishing touches to a second operetta, entitled "Cinderella," book by Maude Elizabeth Inch.

Thomas J. Quigley, manager of the Chicago offices, and Charles E. Hudson, branch manager of department "C" of M. Witmark & Sons, will be in charge of their exhibit at the Illinois Lyceum and Chautauqua Convention at the Hotel La Salle September 14 to 19.

The company has engaged room 1806, where the Witmark songs will be demonstrated.

They will be assisted by Harry Maxfield and Miss Gurnell Anderson.

Among the songs that will be sure to interest you are Vanderpool's "Values," Arthur Penn's "Smilin' Through," Ernest Ball's "Boy of Mine," and Clay Smith's "Sorter Miss You."

Yon—Pietro Yon, the celebrated organist, whose concert appearances in the United States have evidenced a revival of public interest in the organ, announces that his concert appearances this year will be increased to more than one hundred, including many return engagements in the cities where his remarkable artistry has won brilliant success. Mr. Yon, who has been dominant in American musical affairs for several years, is one of the group of young Italian musicians who are making that country one to be seriously reckoned with. With the appearance of so many Roman organizations in the United States this year, Italian music and musicians are occupying a dominant position, and Mr. Yon is one of the most prominent.

PATHE COMPANY SECURES TITO SCHIPA

The Pathe Phonograph Company announces to the music world a valuable addition to its list of noted artists in Tito Schipa, according to the leading critics of Italy, Spain and South America one of the finest lyric tenors that Italy has produced in a generation. This great tenor, who is a member of the Chicago Opera Association, will be heard in all his favorite roles, many of which have been recorded by the Pathe Company. Schipa possesses a purely lyric quality of voice. Its high tones ring true and clear, while his middle and lower register show an evenness that has caused the most critical reviewers to marvel.

The coming of Tito Schipa to the United States has aroused unusual interest in operatic circles. His operas include "Rigoletto," "Tosca," "Traviata," "Barber of Seville," "Fra Diavola," "La Boheme," "Sonnambula," "Madame Butterfly," "Lucia," and many others. The Pathe records will give music lovers an opportunity to hear this famous young singer before the opera season starts. His voice records such as few singers, and every record is a masterpiece of song.

Kanders—Helene Kanders, the noted concert artist, is to make her first New York appearance at a press concert under the auspices of the New York Evening Telegraph, and subsequently will appear in the Metropolitan and Carnegie Hall for her own recitals. Her first Philadelphia engagement will be in her own recital at the Academy of Music under the local supervision of Mrs. Beulah E. Jay, who makes her debut at this time as an impresario.

A NEW SINGER IS JOSEPHINE LUCCHESE

The city of San Antonio, Texas, has always stood in the front ranks of American musicdom; many are the talented artists San Antonio has sent forth and it seems that San Antonio's fecundity in the production of famous artists is merely in its infancy, for legions are its genial musicians and song birds. One of the latest productions of San Antonio is Josephine Lucchese, born in the Texas metropolis twenty summers ago. Of course the name of Josephine Lucchese may mean nothing just now to the uninitiated, but it is a name one should remember. It is that of one of the youngest coloratura soprani on or off the concert or operatic stage, and one that should become a byword of wonderful singing, even as those of Malibran, Jenny Lind, Patti e tutte quante. Besides being born in San Antonio, Josephine Lucchese received her entire education, musical and general, in America, and her artistic singing will hence prove once more that a European training is not absolutely necessary to achieve musical fame. Miss Lucchese's singing will emphasize this fact, and the same method adopted by Jenny Lind, Patti and all the other great singers of the world, and which, whether taught in Italy, France, Germany or San Antonio, Texas, U. S. A., is the only right one. Some people call it bel canto, but in common English it is synonymous to beautiful singing. Miss Lucchese's sweet voice, recalling the beauty of Patti's, will prove this beyond peradventure.

It will be superfluous to speak about Miss Lucchese's range, the flexibility of her organ, her impeccable technic, which adapts her exceptionally well to the florid singing of the Italian music of the middle nineteenth century. What especially characterizes Josephine Lucchese's singing, however, is the sweetness of her voice, her artistry and her bel canto. Her voice was discovered and exclusively trained by Mme. Colombati, the Italian mezzo-soprano, who, after a career in opera houses for over forty years, has still retained all the purity, lusciousness and brilliancy of her voice, and recalls her successes with such artists as Tamagno, De Reszke, Battistini and the other celebrities of a past generation. This is to say that Josephine Lucchese received good training, traditional bel canto training, bequeathed from father to son by a few cognoscenti belonging to the great school of the Porporas and the celebrated singers of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries.

New Yorkers will soon be given an opportunity to listen to some wonderful singing. During his last visit to San Antonio, the great Italian tenor, Bonci, was struck by the beautiful voice of Josephine Lucchese and he predicted for the girlish student a wonderful career and that she would soon shine in the operatic firmament with a brilliancy equal to that of those fixed stars named Jenny Lind and Patti. Although no one is a prophet in his or her own town, the San Antonio papers have proclaimed Miss Lucchese as one of its most gifted young citizens, and the future diva has made a vow to sustain the Texan traditions of excellence and to keep San Antonio on the operatic map. Besides being blessed with a sweet voice, and a real genius for florid music, Miss Lucchese is one of the sweetest and most charming girls one might wish to meet. She is not only lovely in features, but fascinating and of a charming disposition, and there is little doubt but that Miss Lucchese will conquer New York, even as she did San Antonio, and her coming debut recital at Aeolian Hall will surely disclose all the sweetness of this girlish artist.

Refinement of Tone and Delicacy of Touch

Are the Distinguishing Features of the

Baldwin Piano

IT is these features that lend confidence to an artist when playing a recital. Nothing is so inspiring to even the amateur as the sympathetic tone and the wonderfully responsive action of the Baldwin.

Editorial

PASSING COMMENT

Two little errors which crept into our columns last week need correction:

(1) On page 4, the accompanist who is to play for Mme. Gilderoy Scott should read Mrs. Irene Belden Zaring.

(2) On page 27, the article "Prize Composition May Be Published" should be made complete by the statement that it is the Eric De Lamarter prize for organ sonata which is under discussion.

An interesting series of articles, written especially for Music News by the well-known piano teacher, Glenn Dillard Gunn, will begin in our next issue.

The orchestral musicians who furnished joy the first week of the All-American Exposition at the Coliseum are threatening a boycott against all the sponsors of that organization, which is now said to be bankrupt.

Many rich men and women of Chicago allowed their names to be used, merely in an ornamental sense, supposedly, but now the musicians propose to hold them responsible in a money way also.

There is a hint in this to musicians of all kinds. For, if the orchestra players can organize so thoroughly that they can absolutely protect all members of their organization, why cannot singers, pianists, solo violinists and opera choruses do the same?

There is far too much of speculation with the time and the talents of musicians on the part of irresponsible managers, and there should be an organization of the artists themselves which will be a mutual protection from such imposition.

The circular of the British Music Society recently received at this office provides a definite suggestion which ought to be read by all who are interested in the propaganda of American compositions also, and its ideas should be applied in this country as well as in England; for, musically, we are much in the same boat as our cousins across the ocean.

We quote a part only of this circular:

"The British Music Society has been formed to assert at home and abroad the importance of British music of all periods, and to secure more favorable conditions for the continued production and development of British music of the highest class. The society enrolls not only practicing musicians, professional and amateur, connoisseurs and lovers of music, but all who are conscious of the national importance of music as an element in culture.

"The society is not intended to supplant or compete with any existing organization. It has come into existence to do urgently needed work that is now left undone. Music, being a universal art with a universal language, has for centuries suffered from an excessive concentration of its interests and activities on Italy and Germany. The success with which France, Russia, Poland and Scandinavia have reacted against this tendency by expressing themselves idiosyncratically in music is well known; but England still countenances and even inculcates the superstition that music is a foreign art in which Britons do not excel, and in which, consequently, they would be wise to make a pretense of not desiring to excel. Some British organization to make known the facts that contradict this barbarous error, and to cultivate the rich musical fertility of our country, can no longer be dispensed with; and the British Music Society aims at making itself such an organization."

"The man who cannot stand to have his plans and ideas criticized is a fool. The wise man will welcome criticism, so long as it is honest and intelligent. I know, and you do, men who want no one about that does not agree with them, men who are afraid of being told unpleasant truths. Such men are fools. In a long journey, as Emerson says, 'The truth, however unpleasant, is the safest traveling companion.'"—Theodore Roosevelt.

There is great musical activity in New York just at present, and a quick analysis of the situation leads to the conclusion that the difference between that city and Chicago, for instance, lies in the fact that New York is made into more of a market for music than is possible in Chicago, largely through the presence in the Eastern city of a multitude of managers.

These managers range, of course, all the way through the stages of good, bad and indifferent, but there is enough of good to give comfort and employment to many musicians.

Intrinsically New York should not be any more of a music center than is Chicago, for here in the West we have a multitude of churches to provide employment for singers, and a list of schools and colleges of music that is not surpassed anywhere.

We have not yet, however, systematized and covered the concert field adjacent to Chicago as we should have done, and therefore booking of engagements even at our very doors is done largely by New York agents.

This, of course, is a situation which must change and which will, we believe, change rapidly once the financial questions of the country are fully settled.

And to that end we should welcome every honest, conscientious managerial effort put forth in this city.

There have been several such efforts lately, and while we applaud these and wish the builders of the agencies and the bureaus all possible success, we still hope for more growth along this line, for Chicago should not be subservient to any other music center any longer but should awake to the fact of its own greatness and possibilities with a rush.

MILDRED LANGLAND SPECIALIZES IN COSTUME RECITALS

Miss Mildred Langland is a young singer who is attracting much attention wherever she is heard in Costume Recital work. Her program consists of Children's, Japanese and Scandinavian songs, the latter in peasant costume. She is physically so adaptable, to quote one of her enthusiastic listeners. "She does not imitate a child. She is a child."

MILDRED LANGLAND

Aside from her versatility as an actress, Miss Langland's voice is of an unusually pure lyric quality of coloratura range, which enables her to do with fine effect excerpts from the brilliant repertoire of former Scandinavian prima donnas. Her recital provides a most restful and real entertainment. She has been heard often in Milwaukee, where she has done much of her study and coaching, and it is safe to say she will be heard this year with great pleasure.

PUBLIC SCHOOL MUSIC

We regret to note the death of Mrs. Agnes Hardinge, who has for so many years been in school service in the city. The past few years she has filled an important position in the offices of the city school board in the Tribune Building.

A busy man is H. W. Fairbank these days in the Department of Music in the Chicago Normal College. Classes are well formed and full-fledged after two weeks in session.

Some time in July the writer for this department had the pleasure of attending one of the class hours under the instruction of Effa Ellis Perfield in her studio in the McClurg Building. The work was reported by the editor in a previous issue of this publication.

Mrs. Perfield has spent an exceedingly busy summer in her studio in Chicago and elsewhere.

Miss Edna King, one of the High School music instructors of Joliet, Ill., was in Chicago recently selecting music for her large classes this season. She reports interesting and lively organizations in the music department.

Lyravine Votaw is meeting her normal classes this week for organization in her new studios, 614 Fine Arts Building.

ELIZABETH FORESMAN BAGG

Mrs. Elizabeth Foresman Bagg has resumed her vocal teaching in her studio, Room 927 Kimball Hall, on Tuesdays and Fridays. Mrs. Bagg, who is the author of the articles on "Simplicity in Singing" which have been appearing in Music News during the summer, has had the pleasure of hearing both verbally and by letter from a number of teachers and students in recognition of her work. Mrs. Bagg's teaching has been particularly successful along the lines of foundation work with young voices and reconstruction work with voices which have been injured.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS

William Phillips, the well-known baritone, will resume his teaching at the Cosmopolitan School of Music in the Kimball Building on September 22, with fine prospects of a large class of exceptionally able pupils. His work as a teacher is evidently winning the wide recognition it deserves, for his class this year will have, among others, students from Winnipeg, Los Angeles, Oklahoma, and New York.

Mr. Phillips, in addition to his Chicago work, is head of the vocal department of the University School of Music, Lake Forest, where Mrs. Phillips acts as his first assistant. An exceptionally large enrollment there threatens to take every available hour. As soloist at the First Presbyterian Church of Chicago Mr. Phillips has won a firm place in the hearts of the congregation through his fine interpretations, his earnestness, and the beauty of his voice.

Martinelli—Giovanni Martinelli, Metropolitan tenor, will make an extended concert tour this fall.

Culp—Julia Culp will not be in America this year. This is just as well, probably.

MAX ROSEN, VIOLINIST, COMMENDS MUSICAL EDUCATION

"Your idea of not overlooking the musical education of the child," said Max Rosen, the famous violinist, on the occasion of a recent visit to the summer home of the Hebrew National Orphan House at Rockaway, "is praiseworthy. If, as has been declared, music is a great soother of the emotions, it has a no less spiritualizing effect upon the musician himself. Children who are taught music quickly learn to develop self-control and a deeper perception of the harmonies of life. The teaching of music to the child at an early age is bound to refine his emotions and to teach him to respect order in the world. In the last analysis music is only the fashioning of harmony out of a chaos of sounds.

"The Jews are noted for their musical sense. It is present in their heritage of customs and in the ritual of the synagogue; Jewish law is full of suggestive examples. Everybody knows that David was an expert harpist in his youth, and that Miriam, the sister of Moses, lightened the monotony of the desert for the Jews with music.

"The world has been made infinitely richer by the compositions of Mendelssohn, Meyerbeer, Rubinstein, just to mention a few. It is easy to believe that the race which has produced these musical geniuses will probably produce others as well.

"You are doing the right thing by stressing music in your institution."

Prominent leaders in Jewish affairs are aiding the Hebrew National Orphan House in its half million dollar campaign to cover the cost of the new building just purchased on Tuckahoe road. Six weeks have been set aside for the length of the campaign. So far, however, the greatest interest in the campaign has been manifested on the East Side, which is working feverishly heart and soul to render it an unqualified success.

GILDEROY SCOTT AND VIOLET HOLMES TIDY GIVE PROGRAM IN EVANSTON

On Wednesday of last week a delightful concert was given at the home of Mrs. Lewis Ferguson by Gilderoy Scott, contralto; Violet Holmes Tidy, composer-accompanist; Ethel Murray, cello; Natalie Price, reader, and Irene Beldon Zaring, accompanist.

Mme. Scott is a fine artist and a singer with a big, ringing, contralto voice. She made a definite success in two groups of songs, one with cello obligato. The second group was accompanied by the composer, Violet Holmes Tidy, a newcomer to Chicago—the Cycle is called "Life's Journey," "Dawn and Daybreak," "Noontime," "Sunset," "Night and the Dawn Eternal," and is music of excellent worth and will be often heard on programs this coming season. Mme. Scott made a fine success with it. Her singing has a vital musicianly quality that makes her interpretations of fine dramatic worth. Mme. Tidy is an excellent accompanist, and was accorded a share in the afternoon's honors for her fine playing and lovely song cycle.

Miss Murray gave a group of cello solos and was much enjoyed. Miss Price pleased in readings. Mrs. Zaring gave musicianly support at the piano, and her work was much enjoyed.

WESTERN CONSERVATORY

The opening enrollment of the Western Conservatory and its numerous branches in all parts of the United States for this season exceeds that of any previous year of this long established institution, now in its thirty-sixth scholastic year. President Scott states that the registration in the various departments is not only satisfactory in numbers, but is also representative of more uniformly advanced pupils than is usual. Some very interesting recitals will be forthcoming in the near future.

Frances Papert, mezzo-contralto, of Chicago, recently made a very successful appearance before the San Antonio Musical Club, singing an Aria from "La Gioconda" and encores.

REUTER RETURNS TO CHICAGO

A summer that contained two successful concert appearances as well as much recreation has ended with the return of Rudolph Reuter to his duties at the Chicago Musical College, where a large and enthusiastic class awaited him. Mr. Reuter's plans include appearances in recital in New York (October 31), in Boston, where he achieved such a unique success last season (in January), and in Chicago. Here also he will play a two-piano recital with Edward Collins, a program that will be repeated in La Crosse, Wis., in November.

Mr. Reuter spent several weeks on a quiet farm in the Catskill Mountains, after which he had a most successful appearance with the Stadium Symphony Orchestra in New York City, playing the concerto by Rubinstein in D minor. After this he appeared in recital at Nyack, N. Y., and spent the intervening days in Atlantic City. In addition he made many new rolls for the Duo-Art player that included pieces by Borowski, Collins and Griffes.

JOHN LORING COOK STUDIOS

Mr. Cook has had the most interesting summer in teaching of his twenty-one years in Chicago. Being musical director of the Continental Lyceum Bureau and selecting talent, besides his private teaching, has kept him very busy, although he has found time lately to drive a National Six car.

Among his talented singers sent to Louisville to leave with the companies sent out by the bureau are Loris Ballan, soprano and pianist; Carol Meriwether, reader and singer; Edna Rice, singer and reader; Etta Weaver, soprano, and plans are now being made to add a new circuit of one hundred towns in Florida for new companies now forming.

Campanini—Maestro Campanini has sailed for America on the Dante Allighieri, an Italian steamer, due in New York October 3. With him are Mme. Rosa Raisa, Giacomo Rimini, and Alessandro Dolci, all of whom will take part in the preliminary tour, which opens at Milwaukee on October 13. Teofilo de Angelis, the new associate conductor from the Constanzi, Rome, is also on board. The steamer will make several stops en route.

MOISEIWITSCH BUSY WITH CONCERTS IN ENGLAND UNTIL THE EVE OF DEPARTURE FOR FIRST AMERICAN TOUR

A communication from Messrs. Ibbs and Tillett, London managers of Benno Moiseiwitsch, gives a list of the concert appearances to be made by the celebrated pianist prior to his sailing for America on November 3. The musical season in England gets an earlier impetus than our own, and on the 4th of this month Mr. Moiseiwitsch played at one of the orchestral concerts in Queen's Hall. His engagements for September and October are worth glancing over, giving as they do a clear idea of what great success this artist is enjoying. The September bookings are: 6th, Brighton; 9th, Margate; 13th, Bournemouth; 16th, Queen's Hall (second orchestral appearance); 18th, Torquay; 27th, Queen's Hall recital; 30th, Brighton. In October: 1st, Tunbridge Wells; 2d, Eastbourne; 8th, Malvern; 9th, Bournemouth orchestra concert; 11th, Queen's Hall symphony concert; 14th, Portsmouth orchestral concert; 16th, Northampton; 18th, Chappel Ballad Concert, London; 22d, Birmingham; 23d, Cheltenham; 24th, Bradford; 25th, Liverpool; 27th, Manchester; 28th, Bowden; 30th, Manchester; 31st, Glasgow, and November 1st, Edinborough.

Two days after the Edinborough concert Moiseiwitsch sails from Falmouth, arriving here probably about November 12. His first appearance in America will be with the New York Philharmonic Society November 20.

Free Scholarships—Henry B. Roney offers, as usual, two free scholarships in singing for the coming season, one to the girl under 16 and the boy under 14 who show the greatest talent and ambition among the applicants. MR. AND MRS. HERMAN DEVRIES HAVE A BUSY SUMMER

Why don't the Devries family ever take a vacation? is one of the summer topics wherever Madame Gossip meets her friends. Any seeker for information upon this subject will find a ready answer if he will patrol the fifth floor of the Fine Arts Building, where the Devries headquarters are established.

The reason why Mr. and Mrs. Devries do not close their studios in the summer is very, very simple.

They have too many pupils.

Every year, toward the end of May, they delude themselves with plans for some pleasant summer outing. "Shall we rusticate in the Green Mountains, tour the Berkshires, or cool off in Canada," and in imagination they are far from Michigan avenue.

But soon letters begin to pour in from all parts of the United States. They come from Texas, from Ohio, from California, from town and city, small and large. Teachers and students eager to profit by a few months' teaching in this big music center we call Chicago write to reserve time, some of them demanding a daily lesson.

This season the enrollment averaged about 49 pupils for Mr. Devries and 22 for Mrs. Devries.

It is easy to understand why the vacation was again postponed.

Besides his teaching, Mr. Devries spent what was left of his leisure attending to his duties as music critic of the Chicago American.

FOURTH PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

At the morning service of the Fourth Presbyterian Church last Sunday were presented two anthems which were distinctive and oppositely effective. They were Wood's "Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem" and "Praise the Lord, O My Soul" (Gretchaninoff). The choir was in splendid mood to sing, and Mr. De Lamarter, at the organ, was the usual positive leader and artistic accompanist. "The Lord Bless Thee and Keep Thee," a response written by J. H. Libberton, was particularly singable and likable.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY NOTES

The American Conservatory opened its thirty-fourth season on Thursday, September 11, with an attendance that exceeded all records. Especially noticeable was the influx of students from the far West and the far South, many showing unusual talent and accomplishments. The housing problem for pupils is becoming more and more acute, the various dormitories of the conservatory being filled to capacity.

The Normal School for Teachers will open Saturday, October 4, with lectures by the president, John J. Hattstaedt, this department being under his special direction.

October 4 will also open the recital season of the conservatory, the first Saturday afternoon recital being given on that date. The program and artist appearing will be announced shortly.

September 9 was the closing day for scholarship examinations, of which about twenty were awarded to students of very unusual talent but of scanty means.

Mme. Ragna Linne returned from a protracted vacation in Pasadena, Calif., where she was the object of much attention by the musical fraternity.

Allen Spencer, Karleton Hackett, Heniot Levy, Adolf Weidig, Silvio Scionti, Wilhelm Middelschulte, Louise Robyn, E. Warren K. Howe, Arthur Olaf Andersen and other prominent members of the faculty resumed their work at the conservatory.

VIOLET HOLMES TIDY, COMPOSER AND ACCOMPANIST, LOCATES IN CHICAGO

Violet Holmes Tidy, in private life the wife of the British Vice-Consul, Mr. Hughes-Hallett, is the composer of some splendid songs—four French songs, published in Paris by Pfister Freres, and are to be used extensively by such artists as Mme. Marini, Paris; Pascali and the Monte Carlo Opera, and a Song Cycle, published by Keath Prowse & Co., London, which has been sung frequently in London and Paris. More detailed comment on her compositions later.

Mme. Tidy is a fine accompanist and coach, playing several seasons for the Frank King Clark Studio in Paris, and also acting as a coach, in which she made a great success.

Mme. Tidy will be available for accompanying, as well as coaching. Her studio at present is at 662 Roscoe boulevard.

She is perhaps the only person in Chicago who is authorized to teach the Campbell Tipton Theory, composition and harmony, and she has received attractive offers for her exclusive teaching services.

She is a charming woman and is a welcome addition to the list of musicians in the Chicago field.

MARGUERITE POTTER

Marguerite Potter, the New York mezzo-contralto who appeared at the Lockport Festival with such success, has won especial recognition in the last year or two in the field of the lecture-recital. Miss Potter's lecture-recitals, given in costume, include one entitled "Songs of the American Red Man," another "Songs of the Southland," and another "Songs of the Civil War Period." Another interesting lecture-recital recently added to this group is "Songs and Poetry of the Great War."

Miss Potter combines a beautiful voice with histrionic ability and great magnetism, which make her a popular favorite in musical and educational centers.

Miss Potter has interesting plans for the coming winter. Among these she is planning to present "Shanewis" in costume and a new recital in music of Spanish lands, including Mexican music. Lectures of this type should be eagerly sought after by all educational institutions and would be advantageously adopted on university courses throughout the country.

Following a vacation of six weeks spent in resting and preparing new programs at his summer home in Oxford, Pa., Raymond Wilson, the pianist, has returned to Syracuse, N. Y., full of ambition for his teaching at the university for the coming year. A long list of gifted students has already been booked for Mr. Wilson, and he anticipates an exceptionally busy season.

Mr. Wilson's concert activities will begin early in October, his out-of-town engagements being preceded by a recital at Syracuse University. For this he has prepared a program of exceptional interest and will include the MacDowell "Eroica Sonata," numbers by Chopin, Balakirew, Liapounow and two numbers which have been recently dedicated to Mr. Wilson. These are "A Prelude," by Dr. William Berwald, head of the theory department at Syracuse University, and a "Gavotte Moderne," by Dr. Adolph Frey, head of the piano department of the same institution. The latter composition has just come from the press of G. Schirmer.

ASTOLFO PESCIA'S ARTIST-PUPIL CLOSES THE STADIUM SEASON

How forgetful and ungrateful are our fellow human beings. Have you ever pondered on this while hearing a singer, "Whose pupil is this gentleman or that lady?" While Olga Carrara was entertaining thousands of music lovers at the Stadium few of the listeners credited her work to Chevalier Astolfo Pescia, her vocal master. The audience applauded the singing of "Ritorna Vincitor," from "Aida," but how many music lovers gave a thought to her superb teacher?

If you have enjoyed her "Voi lo Sapete," from "Cavalleria," are you conscious of the fact that such a thing would be impossible without the expert teaching? Naturally it requires a voice to expound singing, but the teacher is just as essential as the existence of a singing voice. Of what use are the children if their parents lack the ability of bringing them up to the standard of manners and education? To what use a voice if the possessor lacks the ability of intelligent employment? If the voice could go all the way alone, why have teachers? The singer's voice is the master's voice. Olga Carrara's voice is Astolfo Pescia's voice. Olga Carrara belongs to the artistic element which has come to the fore without "pull," without "protection," without "bribery," and without flattering influences. Her own merits have won the hearts of listener and critic. Her voice, her style of singing, her interpretation, her versatility, her diction and many other minor qualifications have placed her in the rank of notable artists. She sang "Aida" at the Stadium on the 5th of August. She duplicated her feat on August 15. She "conquered" again on August 27 in a performance of "Trovatore," when her singing caused a veritable ovation. And while we are at this point it is important to add that the critic of the New York Morning Telegraph considered this performance as the most brilliant of the season. Now stop for a few seconds and ask yourself, "Who were the artists enlisted during the season?" You will find among them some whose reputation is universal. Now, one critic admits that "Trovatore" was the best performance of the season. Why? Because Olga Carrara sang on this occasion. To substantiate the above assertion it is necessary to reprint, textually, what the Christian Science Monitor of Boston says of Olga Carrara: "The night brought forward a soprano, Mme. Olga Carrara, who gave promise of winning important recognition by and by as a dramatic singer. She has a rich, powerful and expressive voice, which she uses as one who is well schooled." Retain the words "well schooled" and apply them, justly, to Carrara's teacher, Astolfo Pescia. On September 1 this Italian lyric-dramatic soprano had the honor to close the official season as soloist. She sang "Voi lo Sapete," from "Cavalleria"; "The Birds of the Wilderness," and "Absence," by Martin. One must not forget the abilities of an artist in diction. Her English enunciation was clear and intelligible, for what is a song to singer and listener if the words are lost in the atmosphere? How many of our native singers enunciate Italian in a manner to deserve praise, and the Italian language is much easier to enunciate than English? But Mme. Carrara enunciates English in correct manner because she realizes the importance of the verse in connection with the song. Four appearances at the Stadium have established Mme. Carrara's reputation, and with it that of her vocal teacher, Astolfo Pescia.

COAST PUPILS ENROLL WITH JOHN J. BLACKMORE

John J. Blackmore, the pianist, who has recently come to Chicago from the Pacific Coast and has joined the forces of the Bush Conservatory, announces that later in the season he will give a number of modern recitals in connection with other well-known artists.

Mr. Blackmore expresses himself as highly pleased with the season's outlook, having already enrolled a large list of students at Bush.

Two piano compositions of Mr. Blackmore will be published shortly by a well-known Chicago firm.

PIETRO A. YON

Pietro A. Yon, one of the most famous concert organists in the world, a graduate of the noted Royal Academy of Saint Cecilia in Rome, and for some time substitute organist at the Vatican and the Royal Chapel in Rome, is to make an extensive concert tour the coming season.

Mr. Yon has been a resident of the United States for over twelve years. He has been engaged principally in recitals and teaching. In Carnegie Hall, where he has a magnificent studio, he has developed many of the best organists in this country.

Last year he was invited to make a limited concert tour, which he did with such success that this season he has been persuaded to increase this number. He will have more than 100 concert appearances.

Mr. Yon is one of the artists who has won international distinction and who has carried Italian music art into the most popular instrument, which it was believed would not be possible in the United States.

His compositions for organ as well as for choir are well known and performed all over the world.

Gingrich—Irving Gingrich, Chicago composer, has just had five songs accepted and published by the American Music Publishers, these being "Hear My Prayer," "Now the Day Is Over," and "Oh, for a Closer Walk With God" (sacred), "Love Immortal" (secular) and "Laughing Blue Eyes," a song in the popular style. The previous success of Mr. Gingrich and his well-known music scholarship warrant the belief that all of these songs will meet with success.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE NOTES

Sixty free scholarships were competed for and awarded in the Chicago Musical College last week. The Alfred M. Snydacker scholarship was won by Jane Anderson. So greatly was Mr. Snydacker impressed with the talent disclosed by the applicants for scholarships in the vocal department that he offered a special scholarship in the vocal as well as in the piano department. In the former the award was given to Solidad Rindon of Mereda, Mexico. The Bosley vocal scholarship was won by Irene Dunne of Madison, Ind.

An important engagement for its faculty is announced by the Chicago Musical College. Clarence Eddy, who was one of the guest teachers during the summer term and whose lesson periods were entirely filled with students of the organ from all parts of the country, has been added to the regular faculty of the institution. The most renowned of all American masters of the organ, Mr. Eddy will undoubtedly exercise a great influence upon the development of organ playing in the Middle West by his work in the Chicago Musical College.

The weekly concerts of the Chicago Musical College will open in Ziegfeld Theater Saturday morning, September 27, at 11 o'clock. The concerts will continue weekly until the end of the summer session.

Felix Borowski, president of the Chicago Musical College, will begin his series of lectures on "The History of Music" on Saturday morning, September 27, at 9:15 o'clock.

Pine Bluff is one of the largest cities in the state, and this position is the best in the entire Southwest. Miss Huffman, whose duties will begin immediately, had her entire preparation in public school music under the direction of O. E. Robinson, the head of the Department of Public School Music of the American Conservatory.

CONDUCTOR SALVATORE IMPALLOMENI

On the continent a capable band leader has the same status as an orchestral leader; in America the band leader has not yet attained that position because our bands are not yet a product to be reckoned with. The war, however, has stimulated the question of reforming our brass bands and we hope that we will not stop short of decisive results. A band leader in Europe is often secured for operatic performances. Salvatore Impallomeni, a New York musician, has the rare ability of conducting a band, a symphonic organization and an opera as well.

It is necessary to give some data of his activities. He studied in Rome with Maestri De Santis and Eduardo Vitale. His own gifts were discovered by his father, who was a musician of note. He devoted himself seriously to composition, counterpoint and harmony. He is considered an expert on ancient and modern instruments. He has written a treatise on the origin of the instruments. In Italy he is known as a great bandmaster, having conducted the most famous bands throughout his native land. He is a musician of value and a composer of no mean merits. He is the author of "Fatima" and has written several compositions for various instruments. He was the leading conductor of the Federazione Lirica of New York and in the latter as well as at Brooklyn he distinguished himself as a gifted director. At the Irving Theater of New York he led the standard Italian repertoire with unusual success. He is also a teacher of brass instruments. His numerous occupations are the best proofs of his abilities, and in each branch he distinguishes himself through the knowledge of a man who has studied zealously. J. DE V.

JEANNE BOYD

A splendid little circular has recently been received from Jeanne Boyd, in which are quoted many commendations of her charming and unusual songs, which are constantly growing in popularity. Proof of this may be found in the fact that three of her best songs found a place on the programs of the Lockport Festival this season: "At Morning," "La Tarantella," and "I Have a Rendezvous With Death."

Together with the circular, and of much more personal importance to the writer, comes a letter of greeting from Miss Boyd at her home in Fremont, Neb., where she has been spending the summer. By the time this article goes to press, however, Miss Boyd will have returned to Chicago to take up her work as director of the theory department, teacher of piano, and coach-accompanist at the Lyceum Arts Conservatory. These are only a few, however, of the activities which this most versatile young artist seems able to undertake, for she will also continue to conduct the Lyceum Arts Choral Club, and will no doubt continue to write songs which singers like to sing. Miss Boyd was initiated, in June, 1919, as an honorary member of the national musical sorority, Sigma Alpha Iota. M. C. W.

AMY NEILL

Amy Neill, young Chicago violinist, has returned from New York, where she spent last season coaching with Professor Leopold Auer.

She expects to remain here until next spring.

A FEW DAYS IN NEW YORK

BY THE EDITOR OF MUSIC NEWS

A story was told me by Walter Spry not long ago which runs something like this:

A Chicago child was taken by her parents to Europe. They remained there several years, finally coming back to New York. After being in that city some weeks, the little girl said, one day, "Mamma! When are we going back to America?"

And, of a truth, New York is very much a place apart from the rest of America, and very decidedly sufficient unto itself in the opinion of most of its residents.

Evidently New York has not been so much plagued with strikes during the summer as has Chicago, and there has been much building going on, and the city is much more spick-and-span than a year ago.

Following the close of the actors' strike, the theaters are enjoying a tremendous popularity, the restaurants and hotels are continually crowded, and the music world is giving every evidence that a boom is not only en route, but, in fact, very emphatically here.

New York is so very much spread out, and one who visits the city but infrequently gets lost occasionally in the maze of subways, elevated and street cars, so that it becomes a matter of impossibility in a four-day stay in New York to see more than a very small part of those he would like to visit.

This little article is therefore merely in the form of a few random notes of those who were seen and an apology to those who were, perforce, missed this time, and it is also a promise that they will be interviewed on a later visit.

At Music News office, 1 West Thirty-fourth street, there was great activity—many visitors and much discussion of the coming Publicity Month issues of the paper.

Mr. De Valdor and Mr. Scoglio were found to be in excellent spirits, while Claudia Snyder is still absent on her vacation. At Haensel & Jones', in Aeolian Hall, there was great activity, for not only was there much interest and excitement on account of the concert of Nina Tarasova, which opened the New York season on Saturday evening, September 13, but also there was much work being done on the Althouse tours, which will this season be the greatest in his history, and for Marguerite Namara, who, besides singing again with the Chicago Opera Company, will appear (shortly) in Toronto and Hamilton, Canada, and will later have an extensive tour through the South.

Other items of the Haensel & Jones concern are the facts that Rosen plays this year with the Minneapolis, St. Louis and New York Philharmonic Symphony orchestras, besides giving recitals in Chicago, Grand Rapids and many other cities. Matzenauer, Rosen and Namara appear in the Burnett concerts at Medinah Temple, in Chicago, and Althouse is one of the Kinsolving artists in Chicago.

"Mme. Schumann-Heink has not an open date till the end of December," said Mr. Jones to me, "one of her dates being on the Anna Groff-Bryant Artists' Course at Galesburg, and she is to fill in the late winter and early spring on the Pacific Coast, where she is extremely popular."

Prokofieff will play, according to the same informant, two Chicago recitals under the Neumann management, the dates being October 26 and 28. As to his "Love of Three Oranges," at the Chicago Opera, nothing need be told just at present—the work will speak brilliantly enough later on.

"Following the great success of Rudolph Reuter at the Stadium in New York," said Mr. Jones, "he was equally successful before the Nyack Club on August 27, and these engagements will be followed by others in the East during the season."

Mrs. Antonia Sawyer devoted her comments to Ruth Ray, whom she is to present in recital at Carnegie Hall, November 4, and for whom great interest is being aroused throughout New York. Mrs. Sawyer is enthusiastic in her expectation of a fine season for Ruth Ray and told of a Southern tour which will be announced in fuller details later.

"As for Percy Grainger," said she, "there simply aren't enough dates to go around."

M. H. Hanson is vitally interested, personally, though not in the managerial sense, in the tour of the Vatican Choir, now pending, and is keenly alive also to the interests and the possibilities of Leo Ornstein, who will this year make a very long tour, and whose success may be predicated from the great interest his former work has aroused.

At the office of the Music League of America there was also much optimism and enthusiastic outlook upon the coming season, especially in so far as it specifically concerns May Peterson.

This charming American girl has made such a favorable impression throughout the country that the demand for her services during the coming season is unprecedented.

Miss Peterson is immensely popular in Chicago, as well as in New York, and her countless friends here rejoice in her success.

An afternoon was spent with Astolfo Pescia, the noted vocal teacher, and his wife, Mme. Olga Carrara, soprano, whose immense successes at the New York Stadium have been a subject of comment in recent issues of Music News.

This interesting couple have been three years in America and have already thoroughly established their values and their abilities.

Signor Pescia taught for many years at Milan and has to his credit established opera singers in all parts of the world.

Mme. Carrara has made profound operatic successes in Italy, Spain and the United States, and her triumphs in the "Aida" performances at the Stadium were such as to have aroused New York's admiration to the full and to have created a widespread desire to hear her in the important opera houses.

Signor and Mme. Pescia are ideal hosts and brilliant entertainers.

Little "Womany" Mine - 60c

Words and Music by Ethel M. Springer
High in G; Medium in F; Low in E flat

BURLEIGH LOCATES IN NEW YORK CITY

Cecil Burleigh, the eminent composer and violinist, has made New York City his permanent home, opening his studio at 272 West Ninety-fourth street. He will enter the concert field this Fall, giving a recital at Aeolian Hall on October 24 under the management of Winton & Livingston, Inc.

Requests are already being made for Mr. Burleigh to appear in various cities where his compositions have been so often performed by our leading artists. This, combined with the number of applications received at his studio for lessons, points to a season of great activity, contrasting his more quiet life in the far West, which has been so conducive to creative work. For the last number of years Mr. Burleigh has lived in the Rockies, where the rugged grandeur and solitude found expression in the many works of large and small form which have been added to the already formidable list of publications.

NOTES FROM THE COSMOPOLITAN SCHOOL

The Fall Term of the Cosmopolitan School opened September 8, with the largest registration in the history of the school for the first week. The school quarters of the school have been newly decorated and much new and attractive furniture added to the equipment. A notable addition is the stage in the recital room.

The Academic Course, in which the school takes an especial pride, had the largest classes it has ever registered, a goodly percentage of the student body being convinced of its value as an indispensable groundwork for their musicianship. Students continue to enter this work daily. Arrangements have been made to make up work lost by entering late for all who register for class work before October 1.

Some of the members of the faculty spent the summer vacation as follows: Dr. Carver Williams appeared at the Lockport Festival, where he reports a fine rest and the pleasure in meeting many old friends from east and west. Henry Purmort Eames spent a month hunting and fishing in Grand Marais, Mich. Mrs. W. S. Bracken was for several weeks at Benton Harbor, Mich. L. A. Torrens conducted a wonderfully successful summer class at Lake Geneva, Wis. Gordon Campbell took a trip to Vancouver, B. C., Canada. Rossetter G. Cole and Mrs. Cole were at Peterborough, N. H., and later Mr. Cole taught his usual summer classes in Theory at Columbia University, New York City.

MARIA WINETZKAJA CONQUERS THE LATIN-AMERICAN COUNTRIES

America has been often accused of being a mercenary country. Naturally her critics have never realized that some day the foreign impresarios will have to recur to some means of employing American talents either in the fulfillment of operatic duties or in the concert field. For the last two years one of the valiant foreign impresarios, Mr. Adolfo Bracale, has been compelled to organize his operatic company with American forces because he realized that our native talent can do as well providing the opportunity is being afforded them.

For his tour throughout the Latin-American countries Mr. Bracale has secured the artistic services of Maria Winetzkaja, the wife of an American citizen, who is also an engineer connected wtih the federal authorities.

Notwithstanding her Russian origin, she has lived in America for such a length of time that she herself claims to be a citizen of this country. The past season Mme. Winetzkaja appeared with striking successes in the part of Amneris in "Aida," as Azucena in "Trovatore" and other capital roles of the Latin and French repertoire. Our public is not very expressive with its approval; still it always appreciates the outstanding feature of a genuine artist. The Latin-American countries inwardly and outwardly express their delight or their disillusion.

If you look over the comments of the Latin-American press you will know that this splendid mezzo-soprano has been received with the same due consideration as any of the sensational singers. It uses terms which attest the sterling artistic feats achieved by what Mr. Bracale himself claims is one of the best mezzo-sopranos he ever secured for his organization. She is a concert singer of distinction. Her repertoire is vast, embracing all the classics of the standard school. She sings them in the original languages with a fluent diction, and for these qualities she has always been considered above the ordinary recitalist.

Eilert—Edward Eilert, a popular young baritone of Chicago, who made much success at his two appearances at Lockport, N. Y., last week, has gone to New York, where he will study and will also be in the field for concert and church engagements.

Fremstad—Olive Fremstad will make a transcontinental tour this season.

The Elderly Person

"Once more I say it," said the musician, "the very best part of vacation is getting back to work. I'm keen for rehearsals. I want to sing. I want to be busy again. I had a great time during my holiday, but play isn't in it for a minute with work."

The streets are alive with the well-rested, healthy people who are so eager-footed, so lithe of swing, so bright-eyed and smiling-faced and nimble of speech that they infect one another as well as those who are more sedate. And their actions and words echo the sentiment of the speaker who was glad to get back to his old job and bless it.

Never were the places where people lay by for the summer so crowded with visitors. Accommodations were at a premium and the rurals stored away a mighty harvest for the winter armistice. And didn't they charge! Trust anyone around a summer place to anticipate the highest market rate in the matter of board and supplies. As for the washladies—they will probably go in largely for diamonds! But everyone paid willingly, happily, cheerfully and made the most of the hours. There was a heartiness in the fun, a letting-down to extremely simple enjoyments, that gave a new zest to all intercourse. There didn't seem to be any marked craving for diversion, no strain after much dancing and good clothes, no desire to swagger or display. The ages-old recreations of fishing, swimming, walking, tennis, rowing, reading and loafing held their own well with the modern motoring, golf and fast boats. People never seemed so genuine, so companionable, so kindly and cordial. It made it seem a good world to be in.

Of course, under all was the reaction from the horrible strain of the last four years. And while everyone felt and feels the exactions of the readjustments, these are only hardships, and can be borne and will be corrected in due time. To be sure of something, even if if be disagreeable, is endurable, but the wear and anxiety of uncertainty is exhausting.

Blessed be the young in body! They rebound quickly and resolutely. And this is a world for young people. Their infectious hopefulness and unfearing optimism set the pace and make the music of the march forward. It is life-renewing to see them so alert and ready in these days, after their bit of respite, retrospect and survey. For they do a lot of thinking, even if they do not get credit for it. The war was theirs in sacrifice and endeavor. As the armistice and demobilization gradually brought the momentum back into the stride of peace, they felt the process, its perplexities and problems. An almost visible unrest was on every form of activity—as if no definite plans could be made during winter and spring, and a tight rein must be held on spirits which might chafe. The vacation period was a sort of boundary line. When it came, complete surrender to its privilege followed. From it came refreshment, renewed vigor, clear-eyed purpose and fervor of intention. In every well-respected frame is now a stern, determined, optimistic soul, ready for the future, its demands, problems, perplexities and rewards, sure of its opportunities, eager for the development of its powers and keen for the endeavor that it regards with most favor as the outlet for its potentialities. And the zest all finds its expression in the one word—work. Nothing has ever been given to mankind so fraught with blessing as the right to labor. Any ambition which leaves out that keynote omits the lubricant which keeps the machinery going. Work, hard work, and plenty of it, is the well-deserved heritage of all royal souls. They cannot reach their full height without it.

And what about the work? Are all the jobs desirable? Do they all lead to tangible rewards? Do not too many have to work hopelessly, with no marked return so far as mortal eye can discern?

Well, there is an old fable which has never been supplanted that partly answers the questions. You know questions are never fully answered—they never can be, because they all have more than one answer. But the fable depicts a man, in his vision, allowed to join a procession wherein all the participants threw their individual pack of burdens into a general pile and were allowed to select from that same pile any other pack which they fancied would be easier. For it is to be remembered, always, that there is no living man or woman who does not have to carry some sort of a pack containing their dissatisfactions with what life has dealt out to them. You can't possibly find a contented person. There's a fable about contented people, too—but that belongs elsewhere.

Well, our man in the vision dumped his burden willingly and felt light-hearted to be rid of a permanent annoyance. Then he tried the various assortments laid out, and took his time to make selection. He may have compared himself to the ladies who shop and are never quite sure that the thing they want is not on the upper shelf there. The Elderly Person can't say. But the man, having finally made choice, proceeded to make one fit his back. But they were not adjustable. He couldn't wear any of them with comfort, try as he would. Their attractiveness disappeared when they rubbed the wrong way, hitched crooked or weighed on sensitive nerves. He tried the whole pile, and at last found one that fitted perfectly. And as it settled comfortably into place it took on added beauty. He delighted in it so enthusiastically that he was a bit crestfallen to find it tagged as his own old burden! But, being a philosopher, he accepted the hint and found beauty in it thereafter, because it and his back were meant for each other and each supplemented.

And so it is with work, if one can school himself to see in work well done an end in itself—not just a something to be endured as a means toward an end. Or, as Van Dyke puts it, one's own work can only be done by one's own self. To omit doing that spoils the plan for one's life as a whole.

In the stir of the new days the boys are not to have it all their own way. The girls are competitors. The war has liberated them from all old conventions. They have the "equality" which Susan B. Anthony pleaded for fifty years ago. And no thinker wants it different, for it will mean, in due time, an exacting standard for men. With independence before her, no self-respecting woman will ever submit to such unhappiness as was too often her portion when marriage was the only sphere of action and "an old maid" a title of embarrassment. Untold misery will be spared the world so soon as a man discovers that he cancels consideration the first time he comes home drunk or abuses his family. If he had received such a lesson years ago the world would have been the happier. It isn't very nice to speak of drunkenness or abuse when looking at these keen, alert, energetic lads. But, tragically, the degenerate can come from such ranks.

With their new freedom the Elderly Person observes in the girls the inevitable disposition to construe liberty as license. He doesn't find any fault, but he can't help wishing they felt differently about the present bathing suits.

The Parson confessed that he took his plunge early in the day, because what he saw on the beach in the afternoon was too promiscuous. He wasn't shocked or harsh, but there is a bloom on modesty and reserve which elderly men do not like to see rubbed off of young people. So long, however, as fathers and brothers and husbands sit by and make no protest there is no ground for other criticism. There was a languorous waltz at one of the summer doings which set the non-Methodist feet of the Elderly Person to tickling. The real nice girl was quite willing, and they started out in an accepted manner. But almost before he could gasp she chose her own way of being held. It was so very snuggling as to be startling, even to one not easily disconcerted. Without severity or prudery, one can't help wishing they wouldn't do some of the things they do.

But these are only surface spots. Underneath is what is admirable, and their part in the reorganization is tremendous. They will meet it and do it with efficiency.

There is a thrill in the anticipation of what the city offers in these coming days in the way of advantages for growth. Each student of any art form cannot fail to tingle as he reads the prospectuses and pictures what it will mean for opportunity. And the one who brings most to what is spread out will be the one who gets the most. As never before, everyone has what he needs—a chance. Largely a chance to work, but that brings all the rest. It's glorious to be alive and right here in these stirring moments.

"He whom a dream hath possessed knoweth no more of doubting, no more of roaming, no more of sorrow. He treads the impalpable marshes, he leaps to a laughing star and rides God's battlefields in a flashing and golden car!"

MUNICIPAL SUMMER MUSIC AT ASBURY PARK

Asbury Park, N. J., has just completed a series of eight summer concerts under the auspices of the Board of Commissioners and its energetic chairman, Mayor Clarence E. Hetrick, which marks an important event in the development of civic music under municipal direction.

It is believed that Asbury Park is the first resort in this country whose city authorities recognized the value of high-class music as a means of attracting and entertaining visitors. In addition, the Board of Commissioners is seeking to interest citizens of Asbury Park in erecting a monster ocean-front auditorium, and this series was one of a number of means taken to stimulate the desire for such a building.

Starting in July, Mayor Hetrick arranged for concerts on eight successive Thursday nights at which grand opera soloists supplied by the Metropolitan Musical Bureau of New York City gave popular programs of solos and concerted numbers from various operas. The concerts were given at the Arcade, at which Arthur Pryor's band plays nightly, and on the concert nights this band also played two selections. Among the artists who appeared were Anna Case, Margaret Matzenauer, Anna Fitziu, Marie Sundelius, Arthur Middleton, Forrest Lamont, Morgan Kingston, Rafaelo Diaz, Millo Picco. In addition a chorus from the Metropolitan Opera House assisted on two occasions, under the direction of William Tyroler.

The success of these concerts, several of which were sold out and all of which were well attended, assures the repetition of the course next year. Mayor Hetrick is to be congratulated on the outcome, since the hearty support given was due largely to his personal efforts and those of his representative, Dan Noble.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE NOTES

Pershing and Dr. Ziegfeld

When General Pershing attended the performance of the "Follies" in New York last Saturday, he sought out Flo Ziegfeld, the manager of that production. "Please," said the General, "send a special message from me to your father, Dr. Ziegfeld, remembering me to him. My sister received her musical education at the Chicago Musical College, where she was a pupil of Dr. Ziegfeld."

"Miss May Pershing," says Dr. Ziegfeld, "was an admirable pupil. When she graduated from the college she won a gold medal. We are proud of her, as well as proud of her brother." That Miss Pershing has a soft spot in her heart for her Alma Mater and for its President Emeritus was made clear on Saturday, when she made a special visit, in company with General Pershing's little son, to the Chicago Musical College.

National American Music Festival at Lockport

Fourth Annual Event Is Very Brilliant—Voted a Complete Success—Scores of American Artists Win Ovations—Hundreds of American Compositions Presented—A Splendid Social Event —Many Plans for Improvements for Next Year Discussed

Reviewed by CHARLES E. WATT

Monday Morning

The first session of the Festival—on Labor Day morning, encountered a rainstorm and chilly weather, but this could not dampen the ardor of the large attendance, and no opening session is remembered when attendance was so large or interest was so alive.

A glance at the book of registrations showed—for the very first session, attendance from New York, Chicago, Pittsburgh, Boston, Philadelphia, St. Louis, Sewickley, Pa.; Chattanooga, Tenn.; Iowa City, Iowa; Geneva, N. Y.; Wilmington, Del.; Houston, Texas; Ithaca, N. Y.; Buffalo, Niagara Falls, Ashtabula, Ohio; Lockport, Syracuse, N. Y.; Roanoke, Va.; Little Rock, Ark., and Nashua, N. H.—and, as this list grew from session to session, it is not difficult for those who were not present to grasp the point that the Festival not only opened splendidly, but that it also maintained throughout the week a fine standard of excellence and interest, with constantly growing and enthusiastic audiences.

After the registrations and the "homecoming" greetings there was an Address of Welcome by Charles W. Moss, a Response by Leonard Liebling, a Poem by M. A. B. Evans, a group of Southern Melodies, introducing C. Mae Pierson (the Black Patti of the South), who created a very favorable impression, and "The Star Spangled Banner," sung with spirit by the entire audience, as also an address on "American Music and Americanism," by Professor Carl Wachter of Buffalo University.

Mr. Wachter gave an impassioned and thoroughly intelligent address in spite of his statement that he knew but little of music, and his expressions of Americanism and loyalty were fine.

"Ninety per cent of all useful inventions are of Americans," he said, "not of Germany, as we have so often been told, and there is no reason why America should not excel in music.

"Emerson said, 'We Americans must stand on our own feet and think our own thoughts,' and, although we have no Beethoven or Mozart as yet, we have had our Washington and our Lincoln, and we must put into our music the beauty and the loyalty made possible by them.

"Who is the true American?" asked Mr. Wachter. "Not necessarily he who has a long American lineage, even though it may go back to the Mayflower, but, rather, he who thinks Americanism and feels the American impulse—he who stands for Americanism against the world."

Monday Afternoon

An encouragingly large audience came to the Auditorium in the afternoon, and, in spite of a defection or two, a splendid program was given, although it was a very short one.

Hazel Peck, pianist, appeared in a new Suite of Ad M. Foerster, the Opus 40.

This is a work of much magnitude, and yet it is not of burdensome length. It is distinctly pianistic throughout, and it shows the composer to be a man of routine and experience as well as possessed of inspiration.

The Prelude is solid and logical, the Waltz engagingly light and airy, the Intermezzo quiet and flowing, but very melodious, and the Finale a well thought out and strictly logical development of and contrast to the other movements.

Miss Peck has great beadth in her playing, and the Suite under her capable hands stood forth as a work of power and coherence.

She has also a musical touch and such correct feeling for values that she was able to shade and color definitely and effectively.

Sara Lemer, violinist, appeared in a group of short works for her instrument, which were of such unusual content and effect as to mark her group not only beautiful but also novel to the extreme and worthy of emulation in its every item.

The Caprice for Violin alone (Theodore Spiering) has good voice leadings and nice contrapuntal effects, but is academic rather than inspired. The "Waves at Pray" (Edwin Grasse) is a bit of definite and flexible charm, feathery of texture and iridescent of hue. Besides having so desirable a violin line, it is also pianistically effective to the last degree, and certainly proved itself desirable in the extreme.

J. WARREN ERB

"Wah Wah Taysee" (Charles Wakefield Cadman) proved to be a lovely melody, Indian-characteristic, as is so much of the Cadman work, and thoroughly adapted to violin,

MARIE SUNDELIUS
Soprano

while "From the Canebrake" (Samuel Gardner) disclosed itself to be just as characteristic and violinistic, and, also—exuberantly pianistic in the accompaniment.

Miss Lemer has good intonation, clear technic and very definite interpretative values, and J. Warren Erb, at the piano, proved ideal in his accompanying and also in his conceptions of the works themselves.

Bessie Bown Ricker, a tremendous favorite at Lockport, who is just back from a year in entertainment work in France, appeared next and was greeted with such enthusiasm as must have warmed her heart.

Dainty, charming and intelligent to the final degree is this piquant entertainer and, as some one said in my hearing, "Lockport wouldn't be Lockport without her."

She appeared in her cunning child dress and manner and recited "Betsy's Back Again," "Jane Jones" and some more of her philosophical little pieces, as well as "Home Again," which is beautifully and effectively patriotic, and a small Clock Poem, to which music has been fitted by Reginald De Koven, which was played at this time—beautifully, by Leonard Liebling.

Monday Evening

One of the finest concerts ever given in Lockport was that of Monday evening, for not only was the selection and contrast of numbers delightful, but also the choice of artists and their manner of handling the program was irreproachable.

Arthur Middleton, Marie Sundelius and Fredericka Gerhardt Downing certainly made a fine group of singers, with much contrast as to voices and wonderful accompaniments by Harry C. Gilbert and J. Warren Erb, while still further variety and interest was furnished through the addition of Oliver Denton, who played the MacDowell "Eroica" with such style and breadth as to make it a living, glowing example of American musical art at its very best.

Mr. Denton has—of course, impeccable technic, and the beauty of his tone is such as to emphasize all that tonal color and nuance which MacDowell indicated.

Mr. Middleton was in superb voice, and he sang with immense style and finish and presented also a thorough inspirational reading of his numbers.

As usual, he disclosed a leaning toward dramatic numbers, and, also quite as usual, he proved his remarkable ability to cope with such compositions.

His list in entirety constituted a fine example of American program possibilities and included "Barrack Ballad" (Bell),

CLEVELAND BOHNET
Pianist

"Smugglers' Song" (Kernochan), "Only a Little While" (Grey), "Christ in Flanders" (Ward Stephens), "De Artagnan's Ride," from "The Three Musketeers" (Ward Stephens), "Standin' in the Need of Prayer" (Reddick), "Sort o' Miss You" (Clay Smith), and two of the best known of the Homer songs.

Mr. Middleton displayed again that wonderful enunciatory power which has always distinguished him and which makes his readings an especial delight, and he gave, also, a remarkable exposition of beautiful, broad and exquisitely modulated singing.

The Grey song is new, I think, and it is a sentimental delight, and not only this, but also James MacDermid's "Sacrament," which was used as encore number, proved to be extremely popular.

Mrs. Downing not only made a most handsome and gracious figure on the stage, but her glorious voice again won her enthusiastic indorsement. The "Spring Song" of the Robin Woman, from "Shanewis," proved to be a highly characteristic and much liked "big" number, while the charming "Values" (Vanderpool) showed lovely tonal quality, and "The Gray Wolf" (Burleigh) afforded a dramatic thrill.

Mrs. Beach's "Ecstasy" made its usual appeal, the lovely little "Twilight" (Glen) made new friends for itself through the Downing loveliness of voice, and Jeanne Boyd's "At Morning" proved anew the talent and the charm both of its composer and its singer, Chicago women both. John Alden Carpenter's "I Don't Care" also was excellently sung and much liked.

Marie Sundelius, the third singer of the evening, looked radiant, sang exquisitely, and gave evidence of the finest sort of musicianship.

"He Stole My Heart," a harmonization by Samuel Endicott, suited the Sundelius voice excellently and proved a popular delight; "To One Away" (Rihm) made only a fair impression; "The Faltering Dusk," a love tragedy of daring aspect and tense feeling, held unfaltering attention, and was much admired, and the soprano Romanza from John Adam Hugo's "The Temple Dancer" was the second indorsement of the evening for American opera, and it, too, proved strong and appealing.

Her second group began with the Indian "Canoe Song" from "Shanewis," proceeded with "The Bird," an intricate song by Dwight Fiske, included a gay thing by Rihm called "Joy," the sentimental but suave "Mavourneen" (Margaret Lang), and concluded with an intensely emotional but wholly melodic new song of Vanderpool, "The Heart Call."

BLANCHE DA COSTA

Among the encores given by Miss Sundelius was one of the first of American ballads, the old, old "Jamie" of Bischoff, and this—like her whole program, proved to be tonal delight.

The Sundelius voice is a wonderful one, very high, very clear, and beautiful and managed with remarkable skill, especially in the high-soaring items.

Tuesday Morning

The morning session was devoted to talk of one sort and another, and it developed a number of interesting points.

There was a Voice Round Table conducted by Katharine Evans von Klenner, during which a great many teachers and artists made short speeches, this being followed by a remarkably fine paper on "Diction" by Mrs. Adele Baldwin, a noted church singer of New York.

Mrs. Baldwin gave reasons for the use of the word Diction in the improper sense in which it is employed by singers and gave also invaluable advice and suggestion, illustrating many of her points with short phrases of songs, presented in such way as to make one wish, very much, to have the pleasure of hearing her in song recital.

She defined Diction as the proper use of articulation and pronunciation—she advocated the study of languages for the express purpose of acquiring a fluent diction—she told of the uses and abuses of accent, phrase, rhythms, vowels, etc., and ended with a strong plea for the more general use of English in song recital and opera, claiming that the language can be made exceptionally beautiful in song through the proper observance of the governing rules.

Following this very much enjoyed paper there was one by Charles E. Watt on the subject, "What Now?"

This was printed in full detail in last week's Music News and further comment now is unnecessary.

It was followed by a very general discussion, during which apt illustrations of the artists' problems were given by Florence Macbeth, Mable Corlew Smith and others.

Tuesday Afternoon

Tuesday afternoon brought a somewhat curtailed program on account of the absence of Harriet Case, soprano, who is remembered for her fine work at Lockport last year.

The first singer of the program, therefore, was Earle Tuckerman, who is advertised as a baritone, but whose very low tones are so good as to suggest irresistibly that he is bass instead. His program was well chosen and, on the whole, very well interpreted, although some of his tempos were much too deliberate.

"Sweet Peggy O'Neil" (Waldrop), with which his program opened, proved to be a neat little composition, musical and expressive; "Spring's a Lovable Ladye" (W. Keith Elliott) made its usual irresistible appeal; "Values" (Vanderpool), by this time grown to be a Festival favorite, was well taken care of; "Lass o' Mine" (Florence Turner Maley), was liked, and "King Solomon and King David" (Will Marion Cooke) added one more to the rapidly growing list of Negro Spirituals which the Festival has developed.

"Give a Man a Horse" (O'Hara) again showed itself to be one of the most characteristic of songs; "A Bag of Whistles" (Crist) again won the appreciative smile; "I Stood on the Ribber of Jordan" (Burleigh) added a new item to the Negro Spiritual group, and "Standin' in the Need o' Prayer" once more proved its popularity.

David Guion, a young Southern man (only twenty-one, I think), who made a fine impression in his compositions last year, was represented by "De Ol' Ark's a-Moverin'" at this time, and again showed a special predilection and talent for the specific genre of songs he writes.

For encores, Mr. Tuckerman used that Chicago favorite, "The Wind Speaks" (G. A. Grant-Schaefer) and "Me and My Little Banjo."

On account of the unavoidable absence of Harriet Case, Mrs. Ricker went on as a "special" and delighted the audience for ten minutes with "Orville Brown" and some more of her special items.

Cleveland Bohnet was the pianist of the afternoon, and certainly proved himself a worthy addition to the Festival and one who will be welcomed as an established favorite next year.

Mr. Bohnet, a splendid teacher and cultured musician, is a pianist of like eloquence and charm, and has a fine equipment of technic, temperament and piano intelligence.

His group was characteristic and brilliant. "The Song of the Mesa" and "The Flute God," by Homer Grun, were fine examples of modern writing for piano which has underneath it solidity and routine, and the Prelude of Arne Oldberg made its usual intellectual appeal.

Two pieces by Charles Griffes, ultra modern in harmonizations, but pianistic in form and appealing in mood values, entitled "Lake at Evening" and "Night Winds," not only were intensely interesting on their own account, but also through the fact that they afforded Mr. Bohnet a most grateful and graceful opportunity to show his appreciation of their values and his ability to cope with them fully.

A singer of the afternoon, who attracted much attention and favorable comment, was Edna F. Indermaur, a Buffalo contralto who has been singing so successfully in a Lockport church that she has just now been engaged for the Church of the Divine Paternity in New York.

Miss Indermaur has a tone of rich quality and velvet smoothness in its lower reaches, roughening up a little at the top of the scale, but dramatic and effective throughout.

She has good musical feeling also, but, like far too many of the singers heard during the week, with a decided tendency to dragging the tempo.

She sang "O Love, but a Day" (Beach),

ARTHUR MIDDLETON
Baritone

"Before the Crucifix" (La Forge), "I Am Thy Harp" (Woodman), "By the Waters of Minnetonka" (Lieurance), and "Morning" (Speaks), giving fine tonal quality to all of them and good musical values to most.

The final artist of the afternoon was James Liebling, New York cellist, who (with Leonard Liebling at the piano) proved himself a fine artist and intelligent musician in his presentation of "Intermezzo" and "Slumber Song" of Max Liebling, and a "Humoreske" of George F. Boyle, the last proving so especially popular that it had to be repeated.

Tuesday Evening

The evening concert was given by Lila Robeson, contralto; Melvena Passmore, coloratura soprano; Frederick Gunster, tenor, and Mme. Sturkow-Ryder, pianist, with Harry M. Gilbert and J. Warren Erb at the piano, forming an irresistible combination.

Mr. Gunster opened the program and at once delighted the very large audience with the beauty of his voice and the delightful interpretations accorded his songs.

Mr. Gunster has a voice which can be made decidedly robust at his will, and yet it is so flexible and so amenable to his intentions that numbers of the most delicately lyric import are also well within his metier.

"Spring's a Lovable Ladye" and "Values," both already known to the audience, again proved fine, and the three pieces following also were beautiful in his readings, and each, in turn, found full favor, these being "Serenade" (Speaks), "The Dream" (Horseman), and "The Pines" (Berthold Neuer).

Especially fine were "Standin' in the Need o' Prayer" and "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot," Mr. Gunster having a special flair for this sort of work and absolute command of the necessary equipment.

Two songs of Marshall Bartholomew proved to be good material, though not amazingly beautiful on a first hearing, while Harry Gilbert's "O Were My Love Like Yon Lilac Fair" proved itself a vocal delight as given by this skillful tenor.

Two Japanese Sword songs (Fay Foster) were dramatic, full of color and so brilliant in presentation as to mark Mr. Gunster a master of styles and music moods.

Lila Robeson is that rara avis, a contralto who has spirit and movement.

She knows that accent is necessary and that rhythmic flow is an essential to the pleasure of an audience, and therefore her work proved to be a joy not only from this standpoint, but also because of its immense vocal charm and its sanity of interpretation.

LUCILLE STEVENSON

Her first number was a big work by Di Nogero, called "La Gitana" (from Roumanian fields), and although so novel and unknown as not to carry any sort of interpretative idea to most of the audience, it was yet given a performance full of fire and bravura.

For her second group Miss Robeson sang La Forge's "When Your Dear Hands" with beautiful feeling, Crist's "Mistletoe" with much attention to its introspectivity of thought and feeling, Frederick Vanderpool's "Regret" in a way which must have pleased its composer (who was present) very intensely, and Mary Helen Brown's "Life's Paradise" in a way to make it seem one of the finest moments of the week.

The work of the third singer, Miss Passmore, was also very attractive, but from an absolutely dissimilar viewpoint.

This singer has one of the highest and clearest coloratura soprano voices ever heard, and her skill in the manipulation of tones in altissimo is wonderful.

She can attack the very topmost notes of the range with a perfect pianissimo and can then crescendo and diminuendo exactly as she pleases and with the most astonishing breath control imaginable.

Her tone, for the most part, is just as sweet as it is flexible, and her skill in manipulation of coloratura effects is very rare.

"The Lute in the Grass" (Florence Turner Maley) made an attractive opening number, which was followed convincingly by "A Whispering" and "Sleep, My Darling," two small gems of Mana-Zucca, at once fine and charming.

Spross' "Robin, Sing Me a Song," Densmore's "Elf and Fairy," Thayer's "June," and Crist's "O Come Hither" were coloratura delights, and "He Who Moves in the Dew" (Cadman) proved to have depth of musical feeling as well as skill of manipulation.

Mme. Sturkow-Ryder played only her own compositions, and proved herself, with ease, to be a resourceful, graceful and, at times, intense writer for the instrument she plays so well from a technical standpoint.

Her tonal quality throughout was exquisite, and her work was at all times that of the most skillful and virtuosic of pianists.

Her "Little Suite in C Minor" proved to be a work of enough seriousness of purpose and form to hold the attention of the most scholastic of minds, and yet it is melodious and colorful also to a very unusual degree.

The various movements are short, but most deftly knit together, and the effect of the whole is that of a highly colored and smoothly polished mosaic.

Her second number, "Fantasie Pastorale," is a distinct and exceedingly pleasing novelty.

It is a series of small natural history sketches which, the pianist explained, were suggested to her by the memories of walks taken in Lincoln Park (Chicago) with her father when she was a little girl.

The idea was, as she said, to get away from foreign and stereotyped scenes and fancies and to present, in tone, something very near home and wholly germane to the thought of everyday people.

LYNN B. DANA

The subtitles of this fantasie are: In the Park—The Sunday Crowd—The Mall—The Deer Park and The Kangaroo—The Mall—Sea Lions—The Polar Bear—The Monkey House—The Mall—The Bengal Tiger—The Boa Constrictor—The Mall—The Aviary—Pelicans and Ducks—Prairie Dogs at Play—The Return to the Cars.

With this sketch as a basis, Mme. Sturkow-Ryder has filled out a most skillful and charming picture. The pianistic devices employed are legitimate, appropriate and effective, the melodies are charming, and the general effect excellent.

When this piece is put on the market there is no question whatever but that piano teachers will find it a grateful substitute for Schumann's "Scenes of Childhood" and similar descriptive material.

It created a great sensation at this time, and Mme. Sturkow-Ryder was the recipient of an ovation.

Wednesday Morning

The Wednesday morning session was given over, first, to a special recital by young artists, a second one of this series being given on Friday morning also.

Comment on these will be found at the end of this article.

This was followed by Leonard Liebling, who disclaimed that he would give either an "address" or a "lecture," but, instead, captioning his half hour "The Passing Show in Music," he merely gave a kaleidoscopic review of the whole music situation of the country in succinct and witty terms. Mr. Liebling bubbles over with reminiscences and knowledge of conditions of the moment, and his talks at Lockport have become a feature.

The indifference of the daily press to such an event as that at Lockport aroused his scorn and witty censure, and the eccentricities of musicians themselves in their business operations called forth comment and helpful suggestion.

"American music is not yet the best in the world," said Mr. Liebling, "and whether the specific American music will come from the Indian music or the Negro, or shall be neither specifically, but an amalgam of the music of the whole world, it is, yet, even in its present growth, a reflection of ourselves, and it must be given every opportunity of growth."

Mr. Liebling, during the Festival, appeared as speaker, composer, pianist and accompanist, as well as manager of the vaudeville, and in every capacity showed acumen and skill.

Wednesday Afternoon

The program opened with singing by Louise Boedtker and Edward Eilert, soprano and baritone, both from Chicago. Both sang again, later.

Miss Boedtker showed again that beauty of voice which has made her so much liked in Chicago, and also a charm of personality and musicianship which are unusual to the last degree.

A young singer of great promise is this brilliant young soprano, and much will be heard of her in the future, as clearly indicated in this initial Lockport appearance.

Mr. Eilert, who is now moving to New York, has been a splendid factor in church musical circles in Chicago and at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station.

He has fine personality, good musicianship and splendid voice, and scored heavily at this time.

Aeolia Martin, a young Chicago pianist, came next and proved her worth in the splendid "Theme and Variations" of Edward Royce, a strictly modern work which taxes all the resources of a thoroughly trained pianist.

FREDERICA GERHARDT DOWNING
Contralto

Miss Martin proved herself mistress of the necessary technic, and played with power, as well as with due regard to those moments of delicate contrast which were, perhaps, still more difficult of manipulation.

She made a splendid appearance and impression, and proved, in addition to her marked technical proficiency, that she is a young artist with interpretative ideas and with good piano musicianship as well.

In the absence of the scheduled soprano, Lina Conkling of New York was given a place on the program and at once proved herself one of the attractions of the Festival.

She is a young woman of splendid appearance, and her work throughout was full of the finest sort of intelligence.

She has remarkable power of tone at command, singing dramatic works with the greatest of ease and effect, but she is able to manipulate the lighter passages beautifully also, and her feeling for moods and word pictures is so perfect that she makes each song a characteristic delight.

Curran's "Dawn," sung several times at the Festival, was given a thoroughly fine reading, and this was followed by "Didn't It Rain?" a Negro song which has great vogue and which she appreciates to the full of its content.

Brewer's "Fairy Pipers" has seldom had a more elflike reading, and MacDowell's

EDNA GUNNAR PETERSON

"The Sea," following, proved a fine contrast and an individual delight.

"Hayfields and Butterflies" (Del Riego) made its usual good impression, and MacFadyen's royal "Inter Nos," at the end, was a brilliant and dramatic close, as read by Miss Conkling.

Harvey Hindemyer, tenor, also from New York, sang "Summertime of Long Ago" (Maley) and "The Faltering Dusk" (Kramer), two super-sentimental songs, but thoroughly good for contrast, and "The Call" (Spross) and "Give a Man a Horse" (O'Hara), rousing songs both.

"Wait Till Ah Put on the Crown" (Reddick) added a new item to the Negro spiritual impulse of the week and proved fine, both at this time and in its many subsequent singings by other artists.

Claude Warford's "Earth Is Enough" proved to be a really beautiful and thoroughly remarkable song, suave, yet intense in musical aspect and thoroughly appealing, as presented at this time.

"De whip-po Will" (Stickles) is a unique and new Negro humoreske, and it probably was jotted down as a "possibility" by every man singer present, while "It's A' for Love of Thee" (Homer Bartlett) and "Colleen o' Mine" (Strickland) provided new food for thought, and Fay Foster's "The Americans Come," at the close of the program, again demonstrated its power to enthuse and thrill.

Elizabeth Siedoff, a pianist, played the turgid "Sonata Heroic" (Campbell-Tipton) as well as it could be played, proved Walter Kramer's "At Evening" to be a good addition to the growing list of American piano compositions and demonstrated to Lockport that "The American Indian Rhapsody" of Preston Ware Orem is not only characteristic of the soil, but is also, per se, as good a piece of piano work for concert use as is (for instance) most of the Dohnanyi Rhapsodies, which, in a way, it reminds one of.

Marguerite Potter, contralto, who specializes attractively in costume recitals of various aspects, was heard at this time in a group of Indian songs, which she embellished both with appropriate costume and pleasing vocalism.

A. A. VAN DE MARK
Manager

The group included "Hiawatha's Death Song" and "Her Shadow" (Burton), "Love Song" (Lieurance), "Far Off I Hear a Lover's Flute" (Cadman), "Her Blanket" (Lieurance), "Zuni Lover's Song" and "The Sunrise Call" (Thayer).

This is an authentic and excellently contrasted group and could be written of in elaborate detail, did space but permit.

Wednesday Evening

The Wednesday evening concert, which, of course, attracted a big audience, was given by the dainty and delightful Florence Macbeth, the authoritative Charles W. Clark, the rather austere but wholly scholastic Arthur Hartmann and the somewhat eccentric Wynne Pyle, to say nothing of the attractively musical trio, Hartmann, Leonard Liebling and James Liebling.

The evening was characteristic in a number of ways, one of which was that the program aroused an endless amount of criticism and censure inasmuch as Mr. Hartmann, very improperly, elected to play some of his own transcriptions of famous European pieces.

As these should have no place whatever at Lockport, they are here ignored and mention is made only of Mr. Hartmann's original pieces, "A Cradle Song," "Air in the Olden Style," "Souvenir" and "To a Humming Bird," which were so beautifully played and were, in themselves, so fine as to suggest, irresistibly, that if there are more where these came from, Mr. Hartmann has no need whatever to lean on transcriptions of melodies by European writers for an American Music Festival.

Another item of the evening—this one a peculiarly pleasant one—was the prominence in which the talent and the skill of Hallett Gilberte was brought into relief through the powerful singing of his "Devil's Love Song" by Mr. Clark and the absolutely delightful rendition given his "Moonlight, Starlight" by Florence Macbeth.

Mr. Clark, who has evidently made a profound study of American writings and who has discovered many fine examples, has gone a decided step further and has prepared this repertoire with the utmost of care and invested it with superb artistry.

Surely no one could say that American songs are not worth while with such an example as Mr. Clark's work before him.

"A Sea Poem" of Frank Bibb is beautifully suave writing and Frances Weyman's "Absent" is an introspective gem as presented by the Chicago baritone, while "Girl of the Red Mouth" (Crist), is piquant, and "When Death to Either Shall Come," a new song of Homer, is exquisite.

Following his bent for novelty, Mr. Clark had prepared a second Homer novelty in the shape of the brand new "Lone Dog" of that composer, which, in a way, reminds one of "How's My Boy" inasmuch as it is not remotely musical, but is emphatically dramatic and effective. This dog is a "lean dog, a mean dog" in one verse and in another is "a bad dog, a mad dog," and, altogether, he is made by Mr. Clark into the most colorful of canines ever met and attractive through his very ugliness.

FLORENCE MACBETH
Soprano

Mr. Clark's second appearance was a sort of sublimated Negro group, including works which were all new excepting "Me and My Little Banjo" (Dichmont), which is a cunning conceit not yet threadbare by any means.

Miss Mary Howard has written a clever little song "Courtin' Liza Jane" for Mr. Clark and (with the composer at the piano) this proved to be a great success.

"Don't Be Weary, Traveler" and "Little Wheel a'Turning in My Heart" (William Arms Fisher) were delightful each after its own kind of sentiment, and both were characteristic also and musical.

"Some of These Days" (Guion) completed the effective group and the encore was, as stated before, that brilliant, dramatic and wonderfully effective song of Gilberte, "The Devil's Love Song."

The aforementioned trio played a "Serenade" by Leonard Liebling, which is dedicated to the Lockport Festival and which proved to be musicianly and effective writing, and which was played, of course, impeccably.

Miss Pyle, in unattractive gown and gloomily dark stage, indulged herself in the further eccentricity of having a companion on the stage to hold her score, which she did not need at all.

She is a vigorous, colorful and, at times, beautifully elastic pianist, disclosing also exquisite tonal qualities.

Her playing of the Keltic Sonata (MacDowell) was good, but did not approach in authority the work of Oliver Denton on Monday night in the Eroica. For encore she played a "Romance" (Emil Liebling).

Miss Macbeth, conqueror of hearts and minds alike wherever she goes, was again the same dainty personage and the same intellectual woman we have heard so often.

Her voice is just as exquisite as it is distinctive and her interpretations are, always, at a point of supremacy which few reach.

She was greeted with immense enthusiasm and reaped, at the end, a whirlwind ovation.

She opened with "Come Unto These Yellow Sands" (La Forge), which she positively glorified, and followed with Carpenter's freaky "To a Young Gentleman," which, nevertheless, she made very attractive, dramatically.

MacDowell's "Midsummer Lullaby" was so fine as to refute for all time to come the aspersion sometimes made that a coloratura soprano cannot sing songs of intense feeling, while "The Wind's in the South," a beautiful song of Scott, gave her opportunity for that fluttering, flying, soaring exuberance of which she is past mistress.

"Values" again had a glorious interpretation, "If" (MacFadyen) was a delight, "A

OLIVER DENTON
Pianist

Song" (Bliss) was made musically beautiful by Miss Macbeth, "From the Hills of Dreams" (Bauer) and "Mother of My Heart" (Grey), were delightfully presented and the group ended with the aforementioned beauty of Hallett Gilberte, "Moonlight, Starlight."

Mr. La Forge should give Miss Macbeth an especial vote of thanks for the wonderful reading she gave his "To a Messenger" by way of encore.

THE AUDITORIUM, LOCKPORT

Thursday Morning

On Thursday morning a most interesting Piano Round Table was managed by Leonard Liebling and many important questions were discussed.

Among those taking prominent part in the discussion were Cleveland Bohnet and Horace Clark.

The status of musicians was discussed and Mr. Liebling told many witty stories along the line of the ever present ignorance of the public in its relation to artists, and this was followed by a good many suggestions for improvement, the consensus of opinion being that in organization there would lie an added strength.

This was followed by a half hour talk by Lynn B. Dana, whose subject was on "Broad-mindedness for Musicians."

Mr. Dana expressed the belief that petty jealousies and narrow minded practices were responsible for much of the woe of musicians and advocated earnestly and convincingly that broader intellectual and spiritual life for the musician out of which may grow moderation, affiliation and mutual advantage.

Katherine von Klenner, very popular throughout the week, and with a message always urging outlet, spoke again at this time on the aims and plans of the Opera Club of America, and again did she hold attention.

Thursday Afternoon

The Thursday afternoon program was a thoroughly well-balanced one and it brought quick recognition to Alma Hays Reed, soprano, Dr. Carver Williams, basso, and Kathryn Meisle, contralto, as well as to an impromptu String Trio composed of Gaylord Yost, J. Warren Erb and James Liebling, which was most authoritative in the Suite Op. 83 (Ad M. Foerster) and which received a splendid recognition from the audience.

This Suite proved itself to be fine writing, musical, deft in contrasts and use of modern harmonies and ideas, as well as disclosing, definitely, the routine and the skill which have made the Pittsburgh composer so well known and so much liked.

The introduction of an occasional trio at Lockport proved, this year, a most grateful innovation and it is to be hoped that next year will see many more ensembles and concerted numbers.

Mrs. Reed, radiant and self-possessed, made her introductory bow to Lockport with good will already established, and by the time she had sung her first group her beauty of voice and charm of interpretation had completed the conquest.

Her voice is one of great power and of musical tone; she has perfect control of her resources and can shade and color her work at will.

Her choice of songs was fortunate and in each one she made distinct impression.

"Two Loves" (Reddick), was a good opening number "Echoes" of Harry Gilbert brought acclaim both to singer and composer (who was also accompanist) and "Wake Up" by Phillips proved to be one of the most exhilarating short songs of the Festival.

Ward-Stephen's "Summer Time," always good, proved to be a gem in the Reed presentation and the group of "Negro Spirituals" showed that this brilliant soprano need not leave this class of singing to male voices (which have pretty nearly monopolized it so far), but that she can hold her own with the best of them.

Mrs. Reed sang in this group "Leanin' on the Lawd," "Wait Till I Put on My Crown," and "Standin' in the Need of Prayer" (Reddick), and, being a Southern woman herself, she gave them a particularly characteristic twist as well as displaying full vocal equipment. Her success in these songs was pronounced.

Dr. Williams, a Chicago basso of distinction, also appeared at Lockport for the first time and had the advantage not only of a novel and well chosen program but also of an exceptionally intelligent and sympathetic accompanist in the person of his daughter, Mary Carver Williams.

Marian Coryell, a composer and coach well known both in Chicago and New York, was the first composer represented and her "Medlar Tree" and "The Watcher" proved to be splendidly effective songs as presented by Dr. Williams.

"Sir Patrick Spence" (Walter Edwards Strong), a descriptive song which has its distinctly dramatic moments and which needs to have the text printed on the program in order that full values may be realized, was brilliantly done and the first group included, further, "A Song" by Palmer Christian, a very popular Chicago organist, and "The Ways of Love" by Clarence Dickinson, equally well known both in Chicago and New York, where he is organist of the Brick Presbyterian Church.

Both these songs were of a grade and style to prove the worth of the younger generation of American writers and both were splendidly presented. The Dickinson song has a particularly fine accompaniment and this was conserved to the full of its beauty by Miss Williams.

The second group consisted of "On the Shore" (Neidlinger), "Song of the Ride" (Braun), "The Eagle" (G. A. Grant-Schaefer), "At Tapertime" (Mana-Zucca) and "Roadways" (Densmore), all being good, the contrasts very desirable and the "Eagle" and "Roadways" again proving thoroughly brilliant and effective through the excellence of the accompaniments.

Miss Meisle is the possessor of a glorious voice and a style at once powerful and full of spirit. She scored success in groups containing "Sheep and Lambs" (Homer), "Ma Little Sunflower, Good-Night" (Vanderpool), "Dark and Wondrous Night" and "The Last Hour" (Kramer), "Deep River" (Burleigh), "Leaves" (Mana-Zucca), "A Serenade at the Villa" (Kernochan), "Ev'ry Little Nail" (Vanderpool), "How's My Boy?" (Homer) and "Only of Thee and Me" (Marian Bauer).

As an extra number Miss Lemer again appeared and played the following violin numbers with good tone and excellent style: "Waltz," "Waves at Play" (Grasse) and "From the Canebrake" (Gardner).

Thursday Evening

On Thursday evening there was one defection and one addition, which was a mistake and therefore needs no mention.

There were, however, two additions to the scheduled list of artists which were fine indeed and thoroughly gratifying.

The first was Edward Eilert, bass-baritone, who has lived in Chicago and been song leader at the Great Lakes the past few years but is just now taking up residence in New York.

BESSIE BOWN RICKER
Reader

Mr. Eilert, the possessor of excellent voice, good musicianship and style and an interpreter of variety and charm, gave "Love's Springtime" (Hammond), "Evening and Morning" (Spicker), "The Moon Drops Low" (Cadman), "Requiem" (Homer) and "Recompense" (Hammond), finding especially apt material in the last two songs, in which the bravura suited him excellently.

The Cadman song was presented with much finish, and that of Spicker proved both novel and thoroughly agreeable.

Bessie Bown Ricker was the third extra and, it is needless to say, she scored a rousing success.

There was a cello group by James Liebling, suave and pleasing, as usual; two well-played groups by Edith Thompson, and a rousing success for Mable Corlew Smith, soprano.

Miss Thompson, remembered from last year, played a splendid group of MacDowell, including "Danse Andalouse," "By Smoldering Embers," "Polonaise" and "Shadow Dance," and also a group of novelties including "Impromptu" (Carpenter), "The Buddah of the Lotus Pond" (Charles Roepper) and "Igualada," a Spanish Dance by the brilliant and versatile Mana-Zucca.

Mable Corlew Smith followed up her sensational successes of last year by giving one of the best singing exhibitions of this Festival and scoring a tremendous ovation from an audience which remembered and loved her.

The short Cycle, "Songs of the Seasons," including Spring, Summer, Autumn, and Winter—text by Mrs. Anne Gilberte and music by Hallett Gilberte—sung by Mrs. Smith to the beautiful accompaniment of the composer, proved to be one of the most brilliant as well as musically satisfactory items of the entire week.

Mrs. Smith's voice was of velvet smoothness and great beauty, but at the same time showed even more of that dramatic aspect which made her so notable last year, and her preparation of the Suite having been absolute and her taste impeccable, she was able to give the lovely music in a way to evoke unlimited enthusiasm—in which, of course, Mr. Gilberte, another Lockport favorite, shared equally.

The Suite is not long nor is it intricate, but it is full of musical values; and not only is the vocal line beautiful, but the accompaniment, especially as played by the composer, is remarkably fine.

For encore Mrs. Smith and Mr. Gilberte gave his "Spring Serenade" and again covered themselves with distinction and glory.

For her other group Mrs. Smith gave "Dawn" (Curran), "The Death of the Nightingale," one of the finest of the songs of William Lester (Chicago), and proved it to be thoroughly fine from the vocal standpoint; and with J. Warren Erb at the piano its beautiful piano accompaniment was also shown to great advantage.

LILA ROBESON

"A Song for You" (Vanderpool) still further advanced the prestige of that popular young composer. "When Lovers Part" showed a fine phase of the art of Fay Foster, whose absence this year was much deplored, and "Awake, My Soul, to Gladness" (Densmore) was a bravura delight as manipulated by Mrs. Smith and Mr. Erb.

Friday Afternoon

The special program of young artists, given on Friday morning, will be noted later in this article.

In the afternoon the delayed address of George W. Pound, General Counsel of the Music Industries Chamber of Commerce of America, was delivered, and this splendid speaker and worker again told of his fight for the maintenance and expansion of music in this country and made a strong plea for its still further development in the future.

The soloists of the afternoon were Marie Sidenius Zendt, soprano; Marguerite Ringo, soprano, and Gaylord Yost, violinist.

Mrs. Zendt, gracious and beautiful to look upon, had chosen some very unusual as well as thoroughly beautiful songs, and in these her voice was shown to especial advantage.

It was her first appearance at the Lockport Festival, but not the last, if the decision of the audience amounts to anything.

"Her Love Song" (Mary Turner Salter) introduced the Massachusetts composer delightfully; "My Soul Is an Enchanted Boat" (Woodman) was a pleasing novelty; "Roses" (Elinor Marum) introduced a new composer pleasingly, and the Waltz Song from "Ode to Music" (Henry Hadley) proved to be one of the big and vital moments of the week.

Vanderpool's "Call of the Heart" and "If I Could Have My Way" were presented in a very effective way (with the composer at the piano), and "Christ in Flanders" (Ward-Stephens) was so well done as to create a new interest in the song and to prove that Mrs. Zendt has a decided ability along the dramatic lines as well as along those purely lyric.

Mr. Yost played his Suite "Evening," with divisions called "Serenade," "Negro Dance" and "Farfalla," with much violin musicianship and a fine regard for general musical values.

The composition is a thoroughly interesting one and has a grace of movement and a brilliance of contrasts which will make it much liked whenever used. Mr. Erb, at the piano, signally distinguished himself.

Marguerite Ringo, another soprano, sang in alternation with Mrs. Zendt, and she, too, maintained the fine reputation she had made the previous year, adding materially also to her circle of admirers and proving anew her musical gifts and her good taste in interpretation.

She chose wisely and well in the presenting of "A Bedouin Love Song" and "Tristram and Iseult," by Adolph M. Foerster,

LOUISE BOEDTKER
Soprano

the Pittsburgh composer who is so vitally interested in the Lockport Festival but who was prevented from attendance this year.

These two songs have power as well as beauty, and in the Ringo presentation proved themselves thoroughly fine.

Loomis' "A Little Dutch Garden" provided the appropriate contrast and, as usual, was much liked. "Deserted" proved a good MacDowell selection for Miss Ringo, and Vanderpool's "Ma Little Sunflower, Good-Night" showed again the Vanderpool skill of composition and the Ringo fluency in presentation of works of this caliber.

Two songs by Fay Foster, "A Maiden" and "Swinging," brought this popular woman composer again to attention, and Walter Frederick Jacobs' "The Faery Isle of Janjira" proved to be thoroughly pleasing also, while the group was ended in great style and brilliancy with "The Joy of Spring" (Huntington Woodman).

An added number for Miss Ringo was the attractive "Call of the Heart" (Vanderpool), with the composer at the piano.

Friday Evening

Friday evening was one of the gala occasions of the week, for it was crowded with more attractions than a three-ring circus, including a splendid concert given by Lucille Stevenson, soprano; Edna Gunnar Peterson, pianist; Cecil Burleigh, violinist, and the Rubinstein Chorus, from Buffalo, under the skillful direction of Mary M. Howard, who, besides being a composer and director, is the critic of the Lockport daily and one of the leading papers of Buffalo.

MARGUERITE RINGO
Soprano

Miss Howard told the audience that her girls were not in perfect practice, but, nevertheless, they gave a fine account of themselves and certainly did much credit to their musical mentor, Miss Howard.

They sang dainty little pieces written for women's voices by Spross, Neidlinger and Ethelbert Nevin (otherwise unrepresented on the program), and three pieces by Miss Howard herself, which proved to be of exceptional interest. These were "Bugle Song," "Love Leads the Way" and Two Negro Spirituals, all being of fine musical values and skillfully adapted to the needs of the Rubinstein Chorus, which sang them with good musical tone, fine style and a very creditable amount of finish.

Miss Stevenson disclosed the fact again that her voice is one of the most satisfactory sopranos in the country at the present time and the further certainty that her interpretative ideals are of great distinction.

Her program consisted of two of the most carefully selected and certainly among the most artistically presented groups at the whole Festival.

"There Sits a Bird on Every Tree" (Arthur Foote) is a beautifully sustained vocal line; "Les Silhouettes" is the most delicately colored of any of the Carpenter pieces, and "The Lawd Is Smilin' Through the Do'" proved in Miss Stevenson's reading to be a new kind of song from his pen and extremely agreeable.

Arthur Whiting's "A Birthday" again showed that Woodman had no monopoly of the beautiful text and that another setting can be equally effective. "Return of Spring" (Frances Wyman) proved to be a delicate piece of work; "I Send My Heart Up to Thee" (Branscombe), an intense one; "I Heard a Cry" (William Arms Fisher), a song very much suited to Miss Stevenson and a good song for anybody who can compass its intricacies. "The Song in My Heart" (Phyllis Fergus) showed the Chicago composer in a beautiful light and proved very popular, while "Vox Invicta" (Mary Turner Salter) allowed Miss Stevenson to soar into bravura and dramatic realms with convincing power.

For encore Miss Stevenson gave "To Imogene," modestly announcing it as "by a Chicago composer." It was developed later that Miss Stevenson is herself the writer, and certainly she proved again in its use that she is a versatile as well as thoroughly satisfying artist.

Miss Peterson scored an immediate success at Lockport last year, and she was greeted as a valued and established favorite when she came on the platform at this time.

This compliment was well deserved by her playing, which proved to be brilliant, powerful and finished in the superlative degree.

Technic is no longer a matter for comment in the work of this fine artist, and her intelligence of pianism and her skill in readings are alike remarkable.

In Henry Holden Huss' "The Brooklet" she has found a distinct and thoroughly pleasing novelty, and the Lockport audience received it with great acclaim.

Three Preludes of A. Walter Kramer proved not so immediately appealing, but they are, most surely, pieces very much worth while, and Miss Peterson invested them with lovely tonal quality and with sincerity of expression which made them glow again.

In Frank La Forge's "Valse de Concert" she found a happy medium for the display of her virtuosity and also for the disclosure of refinement and finish. It is a big piece, but it was played by Miss Peterson with such definite charm and effect as to win immediate response from the audience, and in answer to encore demands Miss Peterson gave a skillful and highly characteristic performance of "Imps," one of the charming pieces written by Mme. Sturkow-Ryder of Chicago.

The final soloist of the evening was Cecil Burleigh, violinist, and to him came a great ovation after the beautiful playing of his own remarkable "Ascension Sonata," in which he had the authoritative assistance of J. Warren Erb at the piano.

EDNA DE LIMA

This work is too big for hasty review and therefore more will be written about it at another time. It is unquestionably one of the greatest additions to American music composition put forth in many years and will become a classic.

Later he played "The Brook," "Hills," "Fairyland" and "The Fisherman," from his own pen, and proved them to be dainty, charming pieces and himself a master artist in manipulation of the bow.

Following this remarkable program there occurred the Three-Ring Circus event aforementioned, and as everybody knows that it is impossible to detail such an event, we will be content for the present to merely sketch the happenings.

OLIVE NEVIN

There was, then, an hour of "Homemade Vaudeville" under the direction of Leonard Liebling, which was nothing less than convulsing in its fun and fancy.

A little old lady of Lockport (eighty-five years young, it is said) played some old-fashioned pieces quaintly. A young woman of pre-Civil War times (in the person of Sturkow-Ryder) played "The Maiden's Prayer" in a way to convulse the audience and win her fresh laurels for versatility. Frederick Gunster was absolutely funny in a Hebrew sketch, and "Chicago Lucy" (Lucille Stevenson) gave an imitation of all the bad singing ever heard in the world (including Lockport) and brought down the house. Harry Gilbert was, as usual, very laughable in his act, and Bessie Bown Ricker was a delight in a little boy sketch.

Many others assisted in one way or another and there was a "Grand Finale" in which at least a million dollars' worth of voices were heard (exuberantly) in the Sextet from "Lucia."

Then came the banquet, and then came dancing; but long ere this was much more than begun the present writer was safe in his little bed.

Saturday Morning

Saturday was a day given over to the taking of pictures (some of which are shown with this article), visiting, talking and sight-seeing, to say nothing of two of the best concerts of the week (afternoon and evening).

Several important facts were disclosed during the day. The success of the Festival was emphasized through a number of announcements which were made.

Out of seventy-two artists announced for the week there were but six defections (usually because of sickness), and there were no serious mishaps or changes of any character.

It was officially announced that the fifth of the series of Festivals will be held at Lockport next September, and many of the arrangements are already under way.

Several important additions to the usual scheme of things were discussed during the day, and a number of prize competitions were decided upon. These will be detailed in Music News more fully at a later date.

Saturday Afternoon

The program of Saturday afternoon brought to the platform an established vocal favorite, Olive Nevin, and a new artist in the person of Rosa Hamilton, contralto, who at once proved her charm and her excellence in two solo groups and added novelty to the program as well as much musical beauty by singing two duets with Miss Nevin in a very beautiful way.

These were "Laughter Wears a Lillied Gown" (Branscombe), which is a new and exceptionally desirable number, and an arrangement of "The Year's at the Spring" (Beach), which brings much new beauty to the well-known composition.

Mrs. Hamilton sang for her solo groups "My Menagerie" (Fay Foster), "Before the Crucifix" (La Forge), "The Eagle" (Grant-Schaefer), "The Road's Lament" (Ralph Cox), and a beautiful song cycle of Gena Brans-

ALMA HAYS REED
Soprano

combe, which proved to be one of the worthy and important novelties of the week. This is titled "A Cycle of Love Songs" and includes "The Morning Wind," "Noon," "In Arcady by Moonlight," and "The Open Road."

This singer has a rich, well-modulated and beautifully poised voice, and her success was immediate.

Miss Nevin, radiant as usual in appearance and with the same sincerely charming manner which has made her so many friends at Lockport, sang as a special "Ah, Love, but a Day" (Gilberte), with the composer at the piano, and two groups with Walter Wild assisting her.

Mr. Wild is a well-known Pittsburgh organist and is also an accompanist par excellence.

He has remarkable piano technic and a musical acumen and style which fit him intimately for his work and which redound continually to the reinforcement and support of the singer.

Mr. Wild played a number of accompaniments during the Festival and throughout proved himself agreeable personally and to be the possessor of a thoroughly artistic feeling and virtuoso equipment.

Miss Nevin's first group included "Exaltation," a wonderfully fine song by Mrs. H. H. A. Beach; "The Call of Rhada," one of the best of the many splendid works of Harriet Ware; "A Garden Is a Lonesome Thing" (Alma Goatley,) "Wings" (Branscombe), and "After" (Beach), this constituting a group not only emphasizing the value of American woman composers but also showing Miss Nevin in a delightfully pleasant and artistic manner.

Her second group opened charmingly with "Come Unto These Yellow Sands" (La Forge), progressed through the lovely "Moonlight" of Charles Wakefield Cadman, "Make Me a Song" (Hadley) and the gay "Summertime" of Ward-Stephens, in all of which the charm of the Nevin personality and the skill and the art of the singer found full play.

Florence Keniston, a soprano from New York, contributed two groups and showed herself a routined and pleasing singer.

Her numbers were "The Dream" (Horseman), "Berry-Brown" (Ward-Stephens), "Welcome, Sweet Wind" (Cadman), "Autumn" (Rogers), "Sonny Boy" (Curran), and the brilliant "One Golden Day" of Fay Foster.

James Liebling made his final solo appearance, playing a group of pieces by Boyle, and the afternoon ended with some excellent piano playing by Aeolia Martin and Myrtle Thompson.

Earlier these two had been chosen as the best of the contestants for first place, and the decision was a tie. At this time the playing was for final decision and the verdict was given in favor of Miss Martin, who is indeed a splendid young artist and a great credit to her Chicago teacher, Max Kramm.

Miss Thompson, however, proved herself also to be very talented and also to have had exceptionally good training.

Saturday Evening

On Saturday evening occurred the first Lockport appearance of Blanche Da Costa, soprano, whose charming personality and delightful friendliness had made her a universal favorite throughout the week.

Miss Da Costa has a beautiful voice and a style which is at once sincere and brilliant.

Her first song, "The Holiday" (Pearl Curran), immediately captured the audience, and this pronounced success was followed up by others, not less pronounced, in "The Retreat"

(La Forge) and "Today Is Fair" (Strickland), the whole forming a fine group and the rounded-out interpretation being of immense charm.

For encore Miss Da Costa gave "The Want of You" (Vanderpool) with delightful tonal quality and fine sentiment.

For her second group she sang the new "Awake, 'Tis the Dawn" (Annie Andras Hawrey) and "The Shadow of the Bamboo Tree" (Foster) with great intelligence and good musical values, and gave such an exhilarating performance of "The Wind's in the South" (Scott) that an encore was inevitable, and for this final number Miss Da Costa was exuberantly brilliant in the beautifully buoyant "Summertime" of Ward-Stephens.

Between the two groups of Miss Da Costa there was an appearance of John Powell, which added materially to the prestige and the following of this fine young Southern pianist. He played his own "Sketches at the Fair" and again made them glow with humor as well as musical beauty.

For encore he played parts of his Southern Suite.

The evening closed with a ten-minute talk by Katherine Evans von Klenner, who dwelt upon the idea of Americanization of opera and who suggested that an American opera should be, in time, written for Lockport and presented there.

Sunday

On Sunday morning a few of the visitors left in Lockport went to church, others watched the boats go through the locks, but more motored to Niagara Falls or made trips through the beautiful fruit country around Lockport.

Sunday Afternoon

On Sunday afternoon there was a goodly audience at the Auditorium in spite of the heat, which, for the first time during the week, was oppressive.

Marie Conde was the first attraction and showed good style in two groups of songs (soprano), including "A Birthday" (Woodman), "Don't Care" (Carpenter), "The Daisy Maids" and "Heart, Mislaid" (La Forge), and "Love Has Wings" (Rodgers).

Bessie Bown Ricker made her final appearance and made so pronounced a success in her half hour of stories (fun and sentiment of childhood) that she evoked a perfect storm of applause, and as she left the hall for the auto which was to convey her to the railroad station the children present lined up to bid her good-by and to shout after her, "Come again!"

Two of the winners of the N. F. M. C. contest at Peterborough, N. H., were presented, through special engagement, by Mr. Van de Mark, and were permitted to play the numbers in which they won prizes.

"It is good to hear some Chopin again," said one as Arthur Klein was playing a ballade of that master, and so indeed it was, but even this did not dim the beauty and the glory of the many American compositions heard during the week, the list including MacDowell, Foote, Foerster, Oldberg, Griffes, Royce, Sturkow-Ryder, Kramer, Orem, Carpenter, Mana-Zucca, Huss, La Forge, Cole and others.

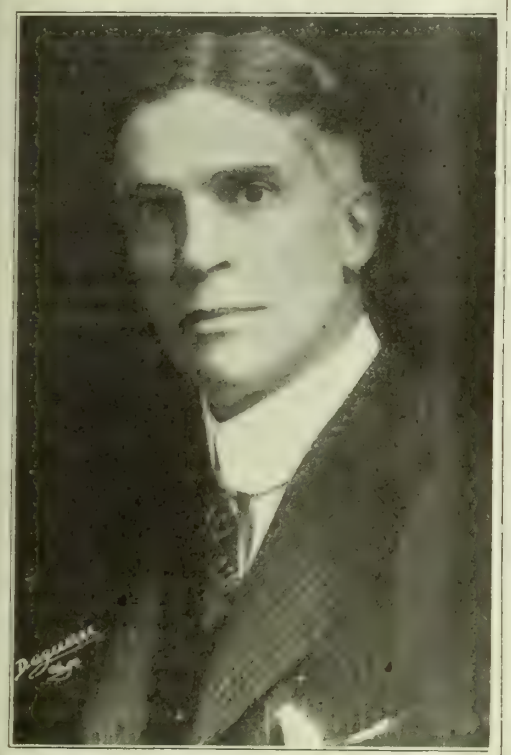
Mr. Klein has fine presence and much poise, brilliancy of technic, as well as good musical tone, and he seems surely destined for much success.

The second of the Peterborough winners to appear was Miss Shields, who presented a fine list of songs, including "Less Than the Dust" (Woodforde-Finden), "At Parting" (Rogers), "Evening Song" (Gilberte), "A Summer Night" (A. Goring Thomas), and "Necklace of Love" (Nevin).



Dr. CARVER WILLIAMS

Miss Shields has excellent presence and fine musicianship, these matching her voice, which is one of power and beauty.

She presented her program with a wealth of tonal beauty.

Sunday Evening

The Lockport visitors, for the most part, made it a business to stay throughout the week and to gain all that was possible through agreeable companionship, the study of repertoire and personalities, and all the other Lockport specialties.

However, the outgoing rush began on Saturday, and by Sunday evening there were not many artists present other than those on the program.

But these had an especial advantage over those appearing earlier in the week, inasmuch as there was present at the Auditorium an immense audience of the residents of Lockport, and these furnished a splendidly knowledgeous and appreciative mass.

The first appearance of Edna de Lima at Lockport was made at this time, and she walked away with an ovation.

Mme. De Lima is a beautiful woman, and knows all about stagecraft, much to her advantage.

She has a most winning personality and a way of taking the audience into her confidence which is winning indeed.

Mme. De Lima has, furthermore, a beautiful voice and a finely developed musicianship, as well as emotional feeling and dramatic impulse, which lead her straight to intelligent and effective interpretations.

In her first group, "The Secret of a Rose" (F. Morris Glass), "Sheep in Clusters" (Endicott), and "How Much I Love You" (La Forge) she was beautifully vocal and expressive, while "The Nightingale" and "Frog Went a-Courting" (Howard Brockway) proved to be genre pieces full of charm as given by Mme. De Lima.

The last named is a Southern mountain folk song which is very characteristic.

Her second group was devoted wholly to John Alden Carpenter, and the Chicago composer would certainly have been gratified could he have heard the sympathetic and beautifully musical rendition given his "Player Queen," "On a Screen," "The Odalesque," and "Come Dance the Jig" by Mme. De Lima, with the superb assistance at the piano of J. Warren Erb.

On this evening, because of the unexplained defection of Orville Harrold, Harvey Hindemeyer, tenor, and Earle Tuckerman, baritone, who had appeared before, were put on for groups of songs, and each scored success in much the same numbers as at their previous appearances.

MME. STURKOW-RYDER

Ralph Soule also sang again, and did excellent work, emphasizing the fine impression he had made previously, while Louise Boedtker, Chicago soprano, charmed everyone in the big audience with her ease and grace of appearance and the unusual beauty of her voice in her added appearance at this time.

Aeolia Martin, the talented and excellently trained young Chicago pianist, also made another appearance and again scored the finest sort of appreciation.

The last (but by no means least) pianist of the Festival was Winifred Lamb of Chicago, who made so fine an impression last year that she was selected for this important Sunday evening concert at this Festival.

Miss Lamb is a thoroughly ingratiating personality, and her stage presence is fine.

She plays with splendid authority and the finest sort of musical feeling. Her tone is rich, full and allows of the greatest possible variety of color, while her feeling for the mood values of her pieces proved, at this time, among the most notable of the Festival pianists.

Her program was of wide range and variety, and each item was presented in a way to rivet attention and to command applause.

She opened with the serious but pianistic "Prelude Solinelle" (Yost) and followed this with "The White Peacock" (Charles Griffes), both pieces being intricate and a little abstruse, but played at this time with such fervor as to make them thoroughly likable.

Rossetter G. Cole's "Legende" came next, and again was shown to be a big, well-contrasted and wholly agreeable number.

Carol Robinson, a Chicago pianist, and a favorite of the Festival a year ago, was not present at this event, but two preludes from her pen, played by Miss Lamb, showed her versatility and her musical strength, while the program was ended with Leo Sowerby's astonishingly brilliant and attractively musical fantasie on "The Irish Washerwoman," which in the expert handling of Miss Lamb brought an ovation.

And, after that, there was a scurrying for "the last car to Buffalo," and a hurried saying of "au revoir," and copious and sincere promises to "see you again next year at Lockport," for no one present at the brilliant and successful event of this year will willingly be absent when the opening roll is called next September at the Auditorium in the charming little city of northern New York.

During the week of the Festival there were held several contests for place on regular programs and for position next year, and these enlisted a remarkable number of good pianists and singers.

Mary Carver Williams, who was an attractive and helpful figure throughout the week, has prepared a short statement of these events, and it is here appended.

Gallo's English Opera Sings "Mikado"

Had I not been pleased with Gallo's "Mikado," perhaps I would not have taken the pains to wire the initial performance of September 8.

With the actors' strike over, the impresario of the San Carlo Opera plunged into popular entertainment, and if the balance of his New York season can hold to the standard of September 8 his enterprise will be a success. Notwithstanding the uncomfortable heat, an audience of great numbers and a distinguished one, too, greeted the efforts of the impresario. That the public was pleased witness the great number of encores given each principal.

In vocal honors Warren Proctor, the Chicago tenor, distinguished himself in the role of Nanki Po. This was my first real opportunity to judge the quality of his voice. It is an organ of sensuous beauty, clear and resonant in the upper register. Tho Mr. Bendix, the conductor, at times had his orchestra play rather too loud, the tenor's voice was audible. He sang with taste and intelligence, and his success was vociferously approved by the audience. A pleasant vocal surprise was the little and quaint Japanese soprano, Hana Shimozumi. She possesses a voice of a distinctively agreeable quality, especially in the upper register. Her English enunciation was remarkable for its clarity, and without any doubt superior to many of our native singers. Jefferson de Angelis, an old acquaintance, was contagious in his comedy. William Danforth's Mikado stood out conspicuously in his excellent monologues, rendered with artistry. Louis Cassavant, as the Pooh Bah, and Greta Risley, as Katisha, had their share of success. And Rosamond Whiteside must have a note of praise for her ability to interpret one of the little maids.

The chorus consists of good voices, and the scenery was adequate. The orchestra, with some exception, gave adequate accompaniment.

Unless the Society of American Singers strengthens its elements, Gallo's English Company is bound to rival the former as a superior organization.

"The Lost Battalion" (a Movie) at George M. Cohan's Theater

Every American loves his country, and it is quite natural. Every inhabitant of this blessed land must abide by the Constitution of the United States or the Ellis Island Immigration Bureau will act accordingly. In a country where nationalities are in abundance it is the duty of the respective authorities to nationalize them. The individual must accommodate himself to the customs and habits and accept the English language as the only medium for expressing his thoughts. Patriotism in America needs a stimulus or many stimulants. Oratory, literature, the stage and the movies, called by someone "the silent drama," are all good mediums. Patriotism can be revived on the screen, and if only for this reason the movies have accomplished and will accomplish one purpose, and a great one, too.

"The Lost Battalion," produced by Edward A. MacManus, will serve the purpose of patriotism. To see the great battalion of the Argonne defending the American flag is worth a thousand printed accounts. No war picture has brought home the valor of the "Yank" and the "doughboy" as has this particular one. No genuine American should fail to see it. Not every scene is authentic, but the splendid resistance of the "Lost Battalion," consisting of many nationalities, is an example of veracity. And when you have given a glimpse at the "American fighter," remember that he fought a race of "liberty haters." Let us not forget that, above all, American or any other nationality must respect the land which gives him the substance of life.

The "Lost Battalion" will inspire even the somnolent patriot; this film will resurrect the feelings (which perhaps were asleep) of the supersentimental individual whose cry was that "not all Teutons are alike." Tho photos are artistic; they do not blind the eyes; the actors are capable, and, besides, the management furnishes an orchestra directed by Joseph Breil. Mr. Breil has written many scores for the huge film productions and has directed the orchestras, as he did on this occasion. His musical arrangement of the "Lost Battalion" is a sort of potpourri embracing national hymns and excerpts from many scores, ranging from musical comedies to pretentious works. On one or two occasions he brought out some of his own works and they were enjoyed. He conducted ably. He has conducted so many movie performances that one nicknamed him the "film batonist." The proceeds of this film will be devoted to the soldiers of the Re-employment Bureau.

Nina Tarasova Opens Season of Recitals

An immense gathering greeted the Russian ballad singer at Carnegie Hall on September 13. She had the honor to open the season before an audience that packed the hall and which gave proof of its delight by the request of encores, shouts of bis, bravos and other similar demonstrations.

NINA TARASOVA

The vocal powers of Miss Tarasova have improved in volume, especially the middle and the upper registers showing to advantage. What matters if her low register proved to be somewhat hoarse? If her vocal powers are sustained in future appearances her popularity will grow. The singing of the Russian folk songs was delightful. In expression, feeling and diction she has few rivals—only Miss Tarasova should not employ an overabundance of expression, because her voice is sacrificed for the sake of interpretation.

"Eili Eili" was sung better than any of the vocalists previously heard. Mana-Zucca's "Bear" was charmingly done. Max Gegna, cellist, was the assisting soloist. The aria from "Samson and Delilah," transcribed for his instrument, was too slowly rendered. One could hardly commend his tone, which is often indistinct, but he always plays within his powers and no more. Perhaps as an ensemble player he would receive meritorious praise. Lazar Weiner accompanied excellently the vocalist, and Emanuel Bala-

Americans Should Boycott the German Language on the American Stage

While my eyes were concentrated on the "Lost Battalion" (which I am reviewing in this issue) I could not help thinking of the Star Opera Company of New York. While we are plunged into a debate on the League of Nations, while strikes have paralyzed our economic structure, many of us have been forgetting that a German company will attempt to present the works of the Fatherland in their despicable language.

The season is announced to commence in October at the Lexington Theater. Over in England, German works are presented in English. He who would dare present them in the German tongue would find himself very much antagonized. Over here we must not forget that the Teutons are again in action with their music propaganda. Again the question of patriotism comes up. There are "patriots" to order and "patriots" in disguise, and real Americans are not likely to enter the Lexington Theater to attend a German performance.

Pasquale Amato Returns

The excellent baritone of the Metropolitan Opera House returned to New York September 12 on the steamer Caserta. With him arrived also a tenor by the name of Boddini, but not formerly of the Chicago Opera Company, as one daily claims. He will join the Metropolitan in comprimario roles.

A MONSIEUR VOTICHENKO, VIRTUOSE DU TYMPANON

"Lorsque ta main toucha la corde harmonieuse,
Quelque chose a vibré tout au fond de mon coeur
Et j'ai fermé les yeux, pour avoir la douceur
De mieux entendre en moi la voix mystérieuse.

Ce fut d'abord le vent sur la steppe poudreuse
Ou le calme du soir épandait sa langueur—
Puis, rentrant au logis, le chant du moissoneur
Et l'angélus tintait dans la nuit lumineuse.

Vois, quel miracle; fit l'âme du Tympanon
J'avais suivi ton rève au penchant du vallon
J'écoutais s'endormir au loin l'immense plaine.

Et j'ai béni l'etrange et douce volupté
Que l'art fait naitre en nous évoquant la beauté
Qui nous verse l'oubli de la misére humaine.—"

THE WAY TO DO THINGS

If there is that in your nature which demands the best and will take nothing less, and you do not demoralize this standard by the habit of deterioration in everything you do, you will achieve distinction in some line if you have the persistence and determination to follow your ideal.

But if you are satisfied with the cheap and shoddy, the botched and slovenly, if you are not particular about quality in your work, or in your environment, or in your personal habits, then you must expect to take second place, to fall back into the rear of the procession.

People who have accomplished work worth while have had a very high sense of the way to do things. They have not been content with mediocrity. They have not confined themselves to the beaten tracks; they have never been satisfied to do things just as others do them, but always a little better. They always pushed things that came into their hands a little higher up, a little farther on. It is this little higher up, this little farther on, that counts in the quality of life's work. It is the constant effort to be first class in everything one attempts that conquers the heights of excellence.

Kanders—Miss Helene Kanders, the soprano, late of the Metropolitan Opera Company, who made her first American concert appearance at Carnegie Hall in January with brilliant effect, will devote her entire time to concertizing this season. Her first Metropolitan appearance will be at the Hippodrome on Sunday evening, October 5, at a concert for the benefit of the Humanitarian Cult, where the assisting artists will be Maxmilian Pilzer and Georges Baklanoff, with others to be invited. Miss Kanders will present her first recital at Carnegie Hall on Tuesday evening, November 13, and her second appearance here will be January 15. Thereafter she will make a tour as far west as the Pacific Coast

Chicago Opera—Constantin Nicolay, the Greek basso, and Virgilio Lazzari, the Italian basso, are back in Chicago. The other cities that will be visited are St. Paul, Minn., October 17-18; Peoria, Ill., October 15-16; Omaha, Neb., October 20-21; Kansas City, Mo., October 22-23; Oklahoma City, Okla., October 24-25; Fort Worth, Texas, October 27-28-29; Houston, Texas, October 30-31; Little Rock, Ark., November 1-3.

JOHN WARREN ERB

The following is quoted from an attractive folder just received concerning the unrivaled success of John Warren Erb during the past year in the building of song programs. Mr. Erb was re-engaged this year as one of the official accompanists at the Lockport Festival, where he acquitted himself with distinction:

"Entering the New York field less than a year ago after attaining an enviable standing in the West, John Warren Erb has achieved a metropolitan success within twelve short months that one of New York's veteran musicians called 'unique in all my experience for a single season's work.' Mr. Erb has definitely established himself as one of the most prominent among the younger figures in American musical life.

"A conductor of solid achievement, an accompanist of genuine ability, and a coach eagerly sought after by leading recitalists—yet more than all else Mr. Erb is coming to the front as a builder of song programs. His encyclopedic knowledge of the best in the song literature of all countries, coupled with sensitive perception in adapting this knowledge to the vocal and temperamental equipment of the singer, has made his services invaluable. Mr. Erb's ability to assist the artist in finding acceptable material, together with his talent as a coach and accompanist, enables him to bridge the wide gap or absence of connection between the voice builder and recital accompanist, thereby unifying and simplifying the artist's work."

ARTHUR C. BECKER

After a summer vacation in the South, Arthur C. Becker, organist and choir director of St. Vincent's Church, has returned to Chicago to take up his church work and begin his teaching at the Sherwood School of Music, where he is to be affiliated this year. He will also continue his teaching at De Paul University and will organize in connection with St. Vincent's Church a choral society of a hundred voices to be called the De Paul Choral Society. Our good wishes go with Mr. Becker for a successful year.

Enthusiastic plans for the coming musical season are well under way. The Marion Andrews Concert Bureau offers three operas this season, besides four concerts, in the course. We have grown to expect a representation of the best in this series, and this year promises the same. The Chicago Opera Company will be heard in "La Boheme," "Madame Butterfly" and "Aida," and Galli-Curci, Toscha Seidel, Charles Hackett and Louise Homer in recital. The assurance of ten concerts a season by the Chicago Orchestra for the coming five years by a list of guarantors disposes of any anxiety on that score to its followers.

The Arion Musical Club, with Daniel Protheroe conducting as heretofore, will give three concerts as usual, with assisting soloists, as will the A Capella Chorus under Mr. Boeppler.

The Sunday concerts by the Milwaukee Orchestra will begin in November and continue until April.

The MacDowell Club will open its series of ten recitals October 28. Mrs. Louis Auer and Mrs. Sara Schneider Hess will be vocalists heard on that date.

The MacDowell Club Orchestra, composed of sixteen ladies of the MacDowell Club, conducted by Miss Pearl Brice, attracted so much attention by their playing last season that they will be heard in several engagements outside the club this year.

Miss Elsa Bloedel and Miss Clementine Malek have been soloists at the Butterfly Theater the past week.

George Lipschultz, violinist, who was such a strong attraction at the Butterfly Theater last season, has been engaged to direct the orchestra at the Alhambra, where time and money are not spared to make music a special feature.

Much regret is everywhere expressed at the news of the death of Eugene Sullivan, who held such an active place as church and concert singer, as director of community singing and in duet recital work with his sister, Miss Josephine Sullivan.

Miss Ethel Brenk is circulating a most attractive new folder and will open her season with a recital at the Milwaukee Art Society early in October.

The Wisconsin Conservatory, of which institution Frank Olin Thompson is so valuable a member, reopened September 1, as did also the Wisconsin College of Music.

LOCKPORT MUSIC FESTIVAL

Both were most interesting and most successful. On Wednesday morning the following names were announced and in the following songs:

Minnie Carey Stine, Contralto
Aeolia Martin, Pianist
Ruth Helen Davis, Soprano
Florette Oliver, Soprano

Thy Beaming Eyes.....Edward MacDowell
To a Wild Rose.....Edward MacDowell
Song of Joy.....Anita Kimball
A Forest Song.....Benjamin Whelpley

Florette Oliver, Soprano

Dawn.....Pearl G. Curran
Yasmin.....Tom Dobson
The Time for Songs.....James H. Rodgers
I Have a Rendezvous with Death.....Jeanne Boyd

Minnie Carey Stine, Contralto

Theme and Variations in A minor.....Edward Royce

Aeolia Martin, Pianist

The Crying of Water.....Campbell-Tipton
Elf and Fairy.....John Densmore
Ecstasy.....William Morse Rummel

Ruth Helen Davis, Soprano

The Lament of Ian the Proud.....Charles T. Griffes Mood.....Alice Barnett
O Mother My Love.....R. Farley
Were I Yon Star.....Fay Foster

Minnie Carey Stine, Contralto
Blanche Sanders Walker at the Piano

To these were added the names of Adelaide O'Brien, soprano; McEy B. Scott, soprano; Edward Eilert, bass-baritone; Mabel Swick, contralto, and Louise Boedtker, soprano.

Miss O'Brien, who sang first, displayed a beautifully fresh, free voice and an open, pleasing personality. Among her songs she did "Rose in the Bud" (Foerster) and "Wind's in the South" (Scott) especially well.

Miss Oliver's voice was more pointed in quality, well placed and exceedingly brilliant in the upper register. One of her most effective numbers was "Song of Joy," from an operetta, the libretto for which was written by Anita Kimball, who was present at the Festival.

Mabel Swick, who was third on the program, presented a contrast in a contralto voice of warmth and color.

One of the most likable of the younger artists was Miss McEy B. Scott of Houston, Texas, who sang "In Greenwood Fair," from "Robin Hood"; "In God's Acre," by Rungre, and "The Swan," by John Adam Hugo, with violin obligato. The violin part was played by Miss Sara Lemer with good effect, and the ensemble was good throughout, with Mrs. E. D. Bevitt at the piano. Miss Scott's voice is telling of quality and her singing promises well for the future.

Minnie Carey Stine, another promising contralto, who is entering upon her musical career in New York, sang with wealth of tone and artistic interpretation. Her voice is very unusual in caliber and augurs for success.

A Charles W. Clark artist pupil, Louise Boedtker, sang four songs with splendid interpretation and artistic finish. Miss Boedtker possesses a lovely personality of great modesty and simplicity, coupled with a real gift for singing which ought to bring her unparalleled success in her work. Her songs were "Aedh Wishes for the Clothes of Heaven" (Clyde Van Nuys Fogel), "Evening Song" (Gilberte), "Retreat" (La Forge), and Ward Stephens' "Nightingale."

One of the bright lights of the contest proved to be Ruth Helen Davis, soprano. Miss Davis is a resident of Lockport, who has had a great deal of her training at Oberlin, and her singing spoke very well for her education, for her voice was clear and well poised.

Two of the contestants had their hearings postponed to the afternoon program. One of these was Edward Eilert, who during the war occupied the position of song leader at Great Lakes Naval Training Station. Mr. Eilert has now moved to New York to take up his work there. His voice is a bass-baritone of rich timbre and splendid possibilities. He is already a well routined artist and a good interpreter of songs and with increased experience he will undoubtedly find rank among the foremost singers of today.

Aeolia Martin, artist pupil of Max Kramm, who won the piano contest, played the Royce Theme and Variations with tremendous technic and great finesse of reading. Her gift is genuine and remarkable, and she is well worth hearing. It is worthy of note that it was also Mr. Kramm's pupil who won the competition last year.

Friday

On the Friday morning program there were fewer appearances. Those listed are as follows:

Edith Crill Wild, Soprano
Reba Dal Ridge, Soprano
Rose Schwindler, Mezzo-Contralto
Ralph Soule, Tenor
Harold Branch, Tenor

Rose Schwindler, Mezzo-Contralto
Blanche Sanders Walker at the Piano

Carry Me Back to Old Virginny.....James A. Bland
I Love You Truly.....Carrie Jacobs-Bond

Reba Dal Ridge, Soprano
Blanche Sanders Walker at the Piano

And to these was added Myrtle Thompson, pianist, whose playing made her a close second to Miss Martin in the competition; in fact, so close was the rivalry that the two girls were compelled to repeat their numbers in the hearing of the judges.

Edith Crill Wild, soprano, sang with interest and tonal color, being the possessor of an unusually fine voice.

Reba Dal Ridge presented a winning personality and a voice full of light and verve.

The mezzo-contralto, Rose Schwindler, made an altogether pleasing impression, as did also Harold Branch, tenor.

The outstanding voice of the morning, however, and, in fact, of the entire competition, was that of Ralph Soule, a young artist heard previously at the State Convention in Akron. Mr. Soule combines voice, personality, and poise in deportment, which is only indicative of the truly splendid artist.

BOSTON AND PHILADELPHIA ORCHESTRAS TO PLAY PROKOFIEFF'S SUITE

It was just about this time last season that Serge Prokofieff, the remarkable young Russian composer-pianist, burst upon New York's musical horizon and created a more than mild sensation by the originality and distinction of his gifts. Several of his compositions were played by the Chicago and Russian Symphony Orchestras, with the composer conducting. These aroused the greatest interest and enthusiasm. Now comes the announcement that the Philadelphia Symphony and the Boston Symphony Orchestras will play Mr. Prokofieff's "Scythian Suite" this season. Two more scores for the remarkable young Russian.

Mme. Schumann-Heink Returns to America

The Hague, Aug. 29.—Mme. Schumann-Heink, who sailed for New York on the Rotterdam, was obliged to return to America without having accomplished the errand on which she came to Holland, namely, to take her grandchildren, who are now in Germany, back to America to educate and make American citizens of them. The children's father, who was German, was killed in the war, and the mother's mind was affected by grief. Mme. Schumann-Heink's idea was to make Americans of her grandchildren, but the American passport regulations proved an insurmountable obstacle.—New York Times.

Mr. Groom, who is a well recognized artist at his profession, was assisted by Willard W. Keigwin, tenor; Mrs. Ralph H. Wheeler at the piano and organ, and Frank Noyes, violinist. It is a long time since Mystic audiences have listened to a more pleasing program.—Mystic (Conn.) Press.

Manager Says German Opera Plans Will Stand

George Blumenthal, manager of the New Star Opera Company, says he will produce opera in the German language at the Lexington Theater on October 20, and no outsiders can stop him. The Manhattan Naval Post of the American Legion has declared its intention to agitate against the production.

"I am in this German opera business and I'm going to stay in it," said Mr. Blumenthal yesterday. "We are not only going to produce opera in German, but also in French and Italian. We have bought the theatrical effects of Oscar Hammerstein, who was my employer for years, and we shall try to be successors to him in the field of opera.

"There is nothing un-American about this. I was born in the United States, and at least 40 per cent of the subscribers to our opera season are Americans. My father was a veteran of the Civil War.

"Attempts have been made in the past to produce German operas in English or Italian, and they have failed. There will be no propaganda and no mention of the war in these operas. They are simply entertainments."

A. C. Hostetter, a member of the propaganda committee of the Manhattan Naval Post, said yesterday that the American Legion does not intend to use violence to stop Mr. Blumenthal's production.

"We can't stop him," said Mr. Hostetter. "All we can do is to carry on a campaign of education against him. We don't object to the German music—that would be narrow minded—but we do object to the German language and German ideals which these productions would propagate."—New York Tribune.

About Singers

"Singers are the most interesting people in the world," says George Roberts, an American concert accompanist, "but they are unexpected. You never know what a singer is going to do, and I firmly believe the test of a good accompanist is to be ready and never to fail to do the same thing that a singer does, no matter what that thing may be! To sense a singer's melodic phrase and breathe it with him, that is what we must do. It is the very secret of accompanying. Not a closed secret, of course—a very open one—but one the knowledge of which is not made the most of. Woe betide the accompanist who thinks that the singer will in the public performance follow the same breath marks, for example, that he took in the rehearsal period. There is the constant demand for flexibility of the accompanist; I think that is what makes our work so interesting and keep the mind of the accompanist fresh. A song, perhaps more than any other art-form, lends itself to complete expression on the part of a personality, so that to the accompanist a single song played for a hundred different singers becomes one hundred songs. In the case of a great interpretative artist it may even become a new song each time!"—London (Eng.) Musical Herald.

American Syncopated Orchestra

The Southern Syncopated Orchestra has been giving two concerts a day at the Philharmonic Hall. The orchestra includes twenty-two players, and the distribution of tone is very interesting, though the general effect is too noisy for the size of the hall. There was a male choir of nine vocalists, and a program of twenty-four numbers was given with extraordinary neatness and rapidity. There was not a single dull or incompetent performance; indeed, the choice of instruments was at times startlingly fresh. The most interesting numbers were the traditional religious songs, or "spirituals," sung by a fine vocal quartet. Will Marion Crook conducted in a very able manner, and the sense of rhythm of the whole company was extraordinarily fine.—London (Eng.) Musical Herald.

Schumann-Heink at Birmingham

Great interest has been created in musical circles of Birmingham, Ala., over the announcement that Mme. Schumann-Heink would give a special matinee at the Jefferson Theater Friday, September 26, for the benefit of the Downing Industrial Institute at Brewton, Ala. Because of the special interest that is attracted to the matinee given for the girls' school, it seems certain that the event will be one of the most successful concerts of the season.

After efforts were made to obtain an auditorium for the concert, the idea had to be abandoned and a matinee given instead. All theaters will be "light" on the date of her appearance, hence no place for an evening concert could be obtained. Charles L. Harold, secretary-manager of the Civic Association, under whose auspices the noted artist comes to Birmingham, exhausted every possibility and even considered getting a tent for the affair when he obtained the Jefferson Theater for a special matinee.

The great contralto heard of the Downing Industrial Institute at Chicago while waiting between trains and conversing with an Alabama army officer. She learned that the school is a place where the poorest girl in the state may obtain educational advantages without pay on an equal footing with the wealthy. When she ascertained that the school was frequently without funds she quickly expressed a wish to aid. Her special concert is her method of expressing that wish.

Her own accompanist, La Forge, will accompany her and the concert will be specially selected numbers of her own choice. She has written Mr. Harold that the program will be the best her repertory can afford. Every cent received at the box office will be given to the girls' school at Brewton.

Amy Neill and Lyell Barber Score in Indiana Program

Miss Amy Neill, the talented young violinist of Chicago, who is a great favorite with local chautauqua audiences, was one of the musical features of the Sunday program, her appearances both morning and evening being greeted with a regular ovation.

The same reception was given Lyell Barber, also young and also gifted, whose brilliant piano playing last year established him with the Richmond public as a musician of parts.

These, with Miss Dorothy Neill, the possessor of a lyric soprano of much flexibility and charm, presented the musical phases of Sunday's program instead of the quartet of women vocalists programmed for the day.

The musicians were badly handicapped, however, when they discovered after going on the platform that one of the keys on the piano was disabled, this causing Mr. Barber to change his numbers and to omit altogether the Paderewski composition.

Upon Miss Neill's art the writer has frequently commented and can say nothing more than has already been said, although it might be added that each year shows a ripening and mellowing.

Earnest—Lorraine Earnest, a charming young girl violinist who studied with Leon Sametini at the Chicago Musical College last season, and who is just now returning to resume that work, gave a very successful recital at her home city, Trenton, Mo., recently when she played a well-selected program of works by Tschaikowsky, Wieniawski, Liszt, Nardini, Sarasate, Saint-Saens, and Vieuxtemps. Detailed and very complimentary comment was made in the Trenton Daily Republican.

found in charming apartments in West One Hundred and Sixteenth street, and an hour went by in the swiftest sort of fashion, filled with interesting stories and much of that good, common-sense comment for which Miss Macbeth is famous.

In discussing the talk of Music News' editor at Lockport, Miss Macbeth indorsed the thought of co-operation and mutual protection for musicians, citing her own experiences of the past winter, when she lost heavily through the unreliability of a (pseudo) impresario who induced her to appear in Brooklyn.

"If we had thorough organization among musicians," said she, "such things could not happen."

An interested and interesting member of the little coterie at the Macbeth apartment was Lizette, the beautiful jet-black cat whose acquaintance was made two years ago, when her delightful mistress was singing at Ravinia.

Another interesting soprano, living in upper New York, is Bianca Randall, who, with Alma Wallace, an accompanist formerly well known in Chicago, and who is one of the best in New York, has spent most of the time during the last two years in singing in camps and hospitals.

Miss Randall, a charming personality and an accomplished linguist, lived abroad for some years, and has cultivated her beautiful voice to a fine stage of effectiveness.

She has poise, power, sincerity of style and charm of tonal quality, as well as a very rare intelligence of interpretation and a wide variety of musical thought and feeling.

With the expert assistance of Miss Wallace, she sang a long scene from "Tosca," including "vissi d'Arte," and such was her skill and charm as to arouse a very keen desire to hear her in the entire opera—one also which she is fitted to fill beautifully in the physical sense.

To close the little impromptu recital, Miss Randall sang, very engagingly, "Mammy's Song," a clever and pretty Negro lullaby, written especially for her by her husband, Hamilton Reynolds.

The song is still in manuscript, but should, shortly, go into print.

The Studio Building, on Madison avenue, is an interesting place, inasmuch as it is no more nor less than the old New York home of Robert Ingersoll, converted to the uses of the fine arts, and still has the same physical aspects as when the doughty Colonel lived there.

Here was found Frank La Forge, busy to the last possibility, just as he has been all summer, and J. Warren Erb, who was such a tremendous success at Lockport, and who has become, the last year or two, one of the very important factors in New York's musical life. Mr. Erb is enthusiastic about the Lockport Festival and thinks it one of the most characteristic things in America.

J. Fischer & Bro. were found in the typically "Old New York" Bible House, near lower Broadway, and one of the brothers was found most optimistic in his outlook for the coming season and enthusiastic in review of Lockport, where many of the Fischer songs were presented, notably (with great success) those of Fay Foster.

Mr. Huntzinger of Huntzinger & Dillworth expressed himself as much pleased with the reception given their songs at Lockport, as they print nothing else but American songs.

The vivacious and knowledgeous Miss Joseph (so popular at Lockport) was out to lunch when I stopped at her desk in Witmark's, and the same was true of Leonard Liebling at the Musical Courier office.

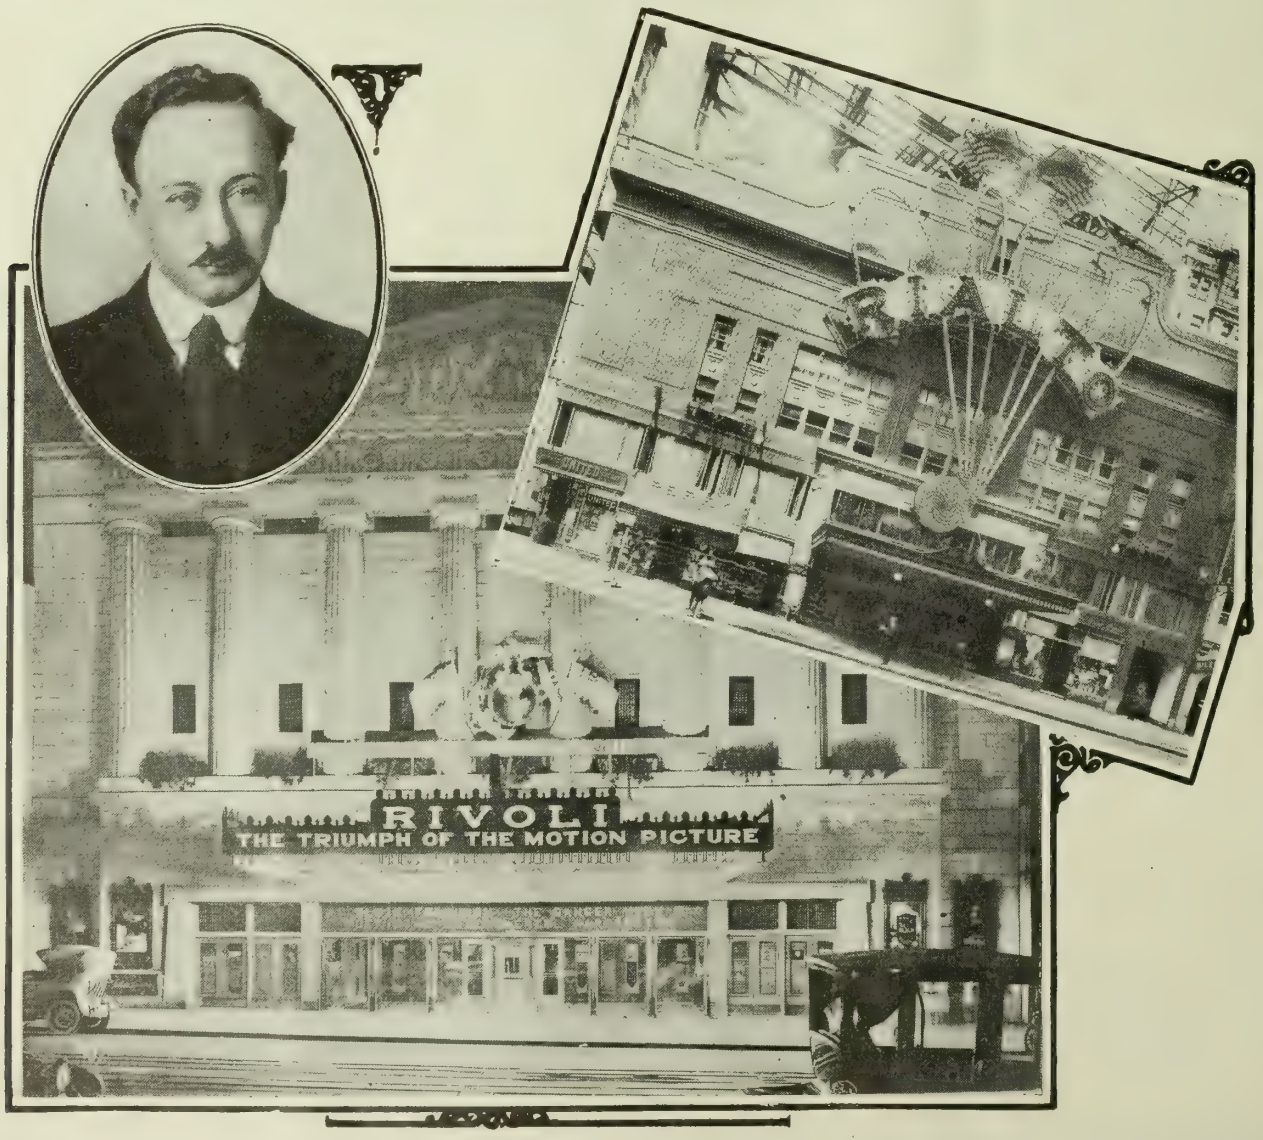
Alma Hays Reed, Chicago soprano, was



VIEWS OF THE RIALTO AND RIVOLI THEATERS IN NEW YORK, SHOWING ALSO, AT UPPER LEFT HAND CORNER, HUGO RIESENFELD, ARTISTIC DIRECTOR OF BOTH encountered on Broadway with her charming pupil, Della Campbell, a young Chicago singer, who will appear at Lockport next year.

Mable Corlew Smith and friend husband, Helmer, were delightful visitors at the hotel, as also Grant Kimbell, recently moved to New York and who has just scored success in an on-the-water performance of "Pinafore" given by the New York Community Opera Company on the U. S. R. Recruit on Tuesday, September 9.

At the theater there were seen in the foyer Mrs. Florence French of the Leader; M. H. Hanson, manager; Wa-tah-wa-so, the Indian Princess who sings so beautifully; William E. Zeuch, now of Boston, and Simon Buchhalter, once of Chicago but now of New York.

In accord with the international characteristics of New York, breakfast was eaten one day at a genuine French restaurant; luncheon as served by "Joe from the Astor House," now located on Vesey street, far downtown, and dinner at Peck & Zucca's, on Forty-ninth street, where a typical Italian table d'hote is served.

There also was a delightful dinner party out at The Bronx; another at Mount Vernon (suburb of New York); boat ride to Staten Island; an ascent to the topmost peak of the Woolworth Building, and a most beautiful motor trip through Westchester County. This included stops at White Plains, Dobbs Ferry, Tarrytown, Irvington and Yonkers and involved views of Sleepy Hollow Cemetery, where Andrew Carnegie is one of the newest tenants and Washington Irving one of the oldest; Helen Gould's estate, as well as hundreds of other glorious places—the Hudson River, the Palisades, Poe's Cottage (where "The Raven" was written), and finally a view of the Concourse, New York's newest row of gorgeous apartment houses.

This magnificent trip was made possible through the courtesy of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Henry, whose daughter, Mary Elizabeth, is a student at the Berlitz School in New York and a graduate of the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music.

Then there were a few glimpses of the theaters, beginning with the Rivoli, where a very famous and equally wonderful picture, "The Miracle Man," is shown. At this beautiful house there is a fine orchestra of great size, and the performance of the "Parsifal" Prelude, heard at this time, was a piece of fine art.

At the Casino Lew Fields was seen in "A Lonely Romeo," a piece of musical comedy froth, beautifully dressed and with an infinity of good dancing and smart impersonations. The plot is good as well as funny, and the dialogue is smart and not noticeably risque.

At the Shubert Theater the Gallo English Opera Company was seen in "The Mikado" and "Chimes of Normandy," the first being much the best.

The Gilbert & Sullivan masterpiece was put on in exceptional style, the scenery was exquisite, the costumes dazzling, and the stage management perfect.

A very large orchestra, under the direction of Max Bendix, read the score better than it has ever been heard by this writer. The principals were adequate throughout and in some cases brilliant.

Warren Proctor (of Chicago until just now) gave a good dramatic performance of Nanki Poo and sang very much better than anyone else in the cast.

Hana Shimozumi, a new Japanese singer, was a lovely Yum Yum and doubtless would shine also as Mme. Butterfly.

The other maids were well done by Rosamond Whiteside and Gertrude Spannon.

William Danforth was an amusing Mikado, Jefferson D'Angelis a good Ko Ko, Louis Cassavant was funny as Poo Bah.

Greta Risley repeated her Chicago success of Katisha, and the rest were adequate.

Mr. Gallo has undoubtedly struck a popular lead and is developing it in his usual characteristic and artistic fashion.

His English Opera Company will be a success just as his grand opera company has been.

ALMA HAYS REED AT LOCKPORT

Alma Hays Reed, soprano, made a fine success singing Will Reddick's "Two Loves."

Urbana—Professor Frank Tatham Johnson of the University of Illinois, with Mrs. Johnson and sons, has returned to Urbana after a vacation spent in Winnetka, Ill.

Editorial

PASSING COMMENT

There seems to be one unmistakable lesson to be drawn from the failure of the All-American Exposition, which was held recently in Chicago, and which, it was expected, would be a brilliant success, instead of a dismal failure.

Beyond any question, this failure grew out of the fact that the public gained the impression that the affair was pro-German.

It may not have had a particle of German propaganda in it, and yet the announcement that there was to be a "German Day" was most disastrous and had its very prompt effect on musicians especially, many of whom withdrew their offers of services when they heard this statement.

The truth is that we do not want anything German as yet, if indeed we shall ever want it.

We look with a tolerant eye on the German music of the classical periods, and we shall, naturally, use it as freely as it seems to fit into our plans and to accord with our tastes, but the time is now past when we can be made to believe that the German is the "only" or even "the best" music.

And, cogitating on the failure of the All-American Exposition in Chicago, and especially its repudiation by musicians when a taint of German propaganda was suspected, it needs no prophet to surmise that the giving of German opera this year in New York, or anywhere else, will be a failure.

It is not that the German opera is not good, of its kind, but simply that we suspect it of being propaganda, and we do not care to hear it.

And, of a truth, we don't need to hear it. We have discovered, in the past year or two, a whole lot of music other than German, and until we forget the war at least, we will be quite content to use that and let the next generation revive the German music, if they like.

A pamphlet sent to Music News office is called "The Simple Narrative of the Amusement Enterprise That Attempted to Do Business on Conversational Currency," in the course of which there is much amusing reference to the dead and gone All-American Exposition.

Especial reference is made to the man from Evanston who is noted as "the most even-tempered person in that suburb," i. e., HE IS MAD ALL THE TIME, and to his expose of the undesirable parts of the Exposition.

> At harvest time I imagine I hear a chorus rising over all the hills, and I meet no man who is not, deep down within him, a singer! So song follows work: so art grows out of life!
> "Adventures in Contentment."
> —DAVID GRAYSON.

This pamphlet tells an amusing story, as follows:

After the agitation against the Exposition on account of its supposedly pro-German nature had been begun, a certain band leader sent in his program for one of the evening concerts to the music Committee, and on the list was:

"Three Dances From Tom Jones"....German

Evidently the word "German" threw the committee into a panic, and not knowing that German is the name of an English composer, and forgetting that there was any other Jones than the admiral, they proceeded to erase from and add to the program, with the result that it reached the public with the line reading:

"Three Dances From John Paul Jones"

.....(Old English)

The teachers who were present at Lockport were particularly fortunate, inasmuch as it certainly was a privilege and an education to hear works by so long and distinctive a list as this, presented with authority, style and artistry, as was the usual case.

It has been several weeks since there has been any special "drive" of any kind, and the public should be open to the suggestion that the money given to the Salvation Army this week ought to total a great sum.

Certainly the Salvation Army has earned this distinction at the hands of the public.

The musical profession was greatly distressed to learn of the tragic death of the charming singer, Miss Julia Heinrich, who was killed in an accident while in the South, one day last week.

Announcement is made that the Central Church services will be held at Orchestra Hall on Sunday mornings hereafter, instead of at the Auditorium, as for many years.

Dr. Frank Gunsaulus, the distinguished and popular minister-orator, has resigned from this pulpit, and will be heard only until his successor can be chosen.

The life of Central Church has been a long one, but the list of its ministers has been short.

David Swing, wonderful in his appeal and humanity, was first. Newell Dwight Hillis, with the most amazing and convincing flow of poetical language, was second, and, for more years than either of the others, Dr. Gunsaulus, the idol of the people and the advocate of everything kind and good and noble.

The Editor of Music News heard the Valparaiso Students' Orchestra last spring, and therefore he experiences no hesitancy in calling attention to the fact of an unusual opportunity which is being offered deserving students at the University of the Indiana city.

Service in the orchestra is to entitle desirable additions to free tuition throughout the university.

And membership in the playing body itself will be no small education, because the director is a man of skill and artistry, and the repertoire used by this orchestra is such as to teach routine and experience in the best only.

. . . . . .

Music News is in receipt of the following interesting communication from Conrad Bryant Schafer:

Your able and insistent demand for "Americanization" meets our pressing needs—will become historic—for we have to extricate ourselves before we can turn around and negotiate Europe out of its casualistic course. There is no time to spare. Millions of dollars' worth of old publishers' stocks will have to be sacrificed, autocraticised educational lines abandoned, careers of matured Europeanistic teachers and artists ruined. I have consulted them all. But the sacrifice is necessary to forestall civil war and regain our self-determinative status. But one thing can avert both calamities, and that is a prompt answer to your "WHAT NOW?" with WHAT WE DON'T WANT, EUROPE NEEDS.

The following beautiful poem was found in the pages of a contemporary:

THE VIOLIN MAKER

He wrought it tenderly, like a lover,
Out of the heart of a singing tree;
Humming the song of the forest over,
Marvel, and magic, and mystery;
Shaping with care the sounding hollow,
Curving it down like a woman's hand
To hold the notes that should call, or follow,
Or laugh, or sob, at the bow's command.

Piece by perfect piece he fashioned,
One sweet whole when the work was done;
But the flashing soul, the spirit passioned,
Were wood and river and morning sun;
And more than these—when, long years after,
Leapt out the song he had shut within,
Men said, with wonder, and tears, and laughter,
"He left his heart in the violin."

—Katharine Atherton Grimes.

The list of attractions for the Music Teachers' National Association meeting at Philadelphia December 29, 30 and 31 is still growing in size and interest. From word already received the attendance this year promises to be the largest in the recent history of this organization. At the "get-together" informal dinner on Monday evening, when J. Lawrence Erb of the University of Illinois will preside, the speakers will be Theodore Presser of Philadelphia; George W. Pound, manager of the Music Industries Chamber of Commerce of the United States; Dr. John McE. Ward, president of the Philadelphia Organ Players' Club; Arthur L. Manchester of Mexico, Mo., and James Francis Cooke, editor of the Etude. At the Voice Conference on Tuesday afternoon papers will be read by Henry Gordon Thunder, Philip H. Goepp, and Nicholas Douty of Philadelphia, and Leon R. Maxwell of New Orleans. At the Community Music Conference on Wednesday afternoon the participants will be Holmes Cowper of Des Moines, Iowa; Miss Anne McDonough of Philadelphia; George Oscar Bowen of Flint, Mich.; Henry D. Tovey of Fayetteville, Ark., and R. G. McCutchan of De Pauw University, Indiana. Plans are being made for the members and delegates to visit the Presser Home for Retired Musicians in Germantown, but with this exception the activities of the meeting will center about the headquarters, all sessions being held in the Hotel Adelphia. Preliminary announcements and all information regarding the M. T. N. A. may be had on application to the secretary, William Benbow, 825 Elmwood avenue, Buffalo, N. Y.

PRIZE ORGAN COMPOSITION MAY BE PUBLISHED

It has previously been announced that Eric De Lamarter, organist and director of the Fourth Presbyterian Church, Chicago, is offering a prize of $100 for a new organ sonata by a native composer, to have its first hearing at the Fourth Presbyterian Church in one of the weekly organ recitals. The time limit for the contest has been set at December 1, the judges to be Clarence Dickinson, Frederick Stock and Mr. De Lamarter.

Additional announcement is now made that the H. W. Grey Co. (Novello & Co.) will publish the prize winning sonata if, in the judges' opinion, it is worthy not only of publication but of a prize.

Haworth—Helen Boyle Haworth, contralto, has returned from her western visit and will re-enter the church and concert field in Chicago. She has a beautiful voice and other fine equipment for her work, and will doubtless rapidly become a big factor in the local situation. She scored much success in her singing before the I. L. A. convention at the La Salle Hotel last Tuesday evening, when she had the expert assistance of Beulah Taylor Porter at the piano.

CHICAGO OPERA ASSOCIATION

The Chicago Opera Association announces that Italo Montemezzi, composer of "Amore Dei Tre Re," will come to Chicago for the first American production of his new opera, "La Nave." Maestro Campanini, being most enthusiastic about the score and the intensive action of the drama, has prevailed upon Montemezzi to help with the premiere here, and Mlle. Rosa Raisa, who is to create the great role of Basiola, has been studying with the composer at Milan this summer. It is confidently predicted that this darkly tragic masterpiece will prove one of the sensations of the coming winter. It is based on the poem by Gabrielo d'Annunzio, and smybolizes the early struggles and early successes of the Venetian state. It was given its world's premiere at La Scala, Milan, last November.

Adolph Bolm, famous both as a mime dancer and art director, has been engaged to stage John Alden Carpenter's new ballet, "The Birthday of the Infanta," founded on Oscar Wilde's poetic story. He will himself appear as the fantastic, misshaped creature who dances joyfully at the birthday party, only to discover, a short while after, his own terrible grotesqueness. Mr. Bolm is a Russian artist and first came to this country as premier danseur with the Diaghileff Russian Ballet. His wonderful characterizations are well remembered, as he toured the country widely. Since then he has won a secure place in the American art world both as a dancer and as art director. He has staged some remarkable productions for the Metropolitan Opera Company, such as "Petroushka" and Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Golden Cockerel," and now he has his own Adolph Bolm Ballet Intime, which is to tour with George Barrere's Little Symphony. Before coming to this country he was for several years the leading male dancer of the Imperial Ballet in Petrograd. At the age of twenty-one he organized a company of twenty-eight dancers, including Pavlowa, and made a month's tour of Europe. It was really the success of this venture which inspired Diaghileff to start out on his world-wide tours.

Adler—Miss Lois Adler, Chicago pianist, who has spent the summer on the Pacific Coast, will return to Chicago next week and resume teaching at her Fine Arts Building studio. Miss Adler appeared in two recitals in Los Angeles, with much success, and at the Cornish School of Music in Seattle she played a program to the pupils which was a thoroughly artistic event and which aroused the finest sort of comment. Walter Anthony, in the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, writes at length and in enthusiastic praise of the playing of Miss Adler.

CAMEO SALON OF CHICAGO

The first meeting of the Cameo Salon of Chicago was held in the studio of the president, Elizabeth Guion Dormer. There were gathered together thirty eight artists and lovers of the arts. There were short talks by Frederick Leonard Farrar, president of the Playgoers' Club, on the "Rise of Aesthetics in America"; Dr. Joseph Le Roy Denne, vice president of the Cameo, poet, philosopher and lecturer, on "The Soul of Art"; Ida Mansfield Wilson, poet, playwright and leader of the Church and School of the New Civilization, "Smiles," and an opening address by the president, Mrs. Dormer, on "Visualization and Expression." Mrs. Dormer said that for five years she had visualized just such a circle for those interested in all branches of art, literature and philosophy, and the Cameo Salon was the outcome and expression of that vision. Just as the Cameo stands out in exquisite bas relief above the background whence it has been carved, so this club of earnest workers and truth seekers stands forth, typifying the highest and best in art, sculpture, prose, poetry, music, dancing, philosophy and higher thought. Mrs. Dormer quoted from the words of Mme. Rose De Vaux Royer, the founder and president of the New York Cameo Club, author of "Soul Shadows," and "Influence Telepathetique," who has accepted honorary membership in the Chicago Salon, and will be its guest during the winter.

The program was given by the following well-known artists: Frances Carey Libbe, contralto; Edna Wheeler Ballard, harpist; Cleveland Bohnet, pianist, and Signor Maurusio Scaffi, tenor.

The guests of honor were Dr. Julia Seton, the founder of the New Thought Movement; Clarence Eddy, organist, and Mr. and Mrs. Heniot Levy.

Mrs. Ed Miller presided at the piano.

The Salon meets on the second Friday of the month, and its motto is: "All passes; art and truth remain."

NOTES FROM STUDIO OF ESTELLE L. PERSHING

Miss Lydia Anderson sang the offertory solo at Hermosa M. E. Church Sunday, September 1.

The third annual banquet of the Choral Club was held in the Capitol Tea Room, Republic Building. After an excellent dinner the girls were entertained by Miss M. Adelaide Burlingame, reader; Miss Bernice Austen, soprano, and Mrs. Gertrude Senne, contralto. Mrs. Senne is a recent addition to the club and her singing of "Perhaps," by Forester, and "Sweetest Little Feller," by Nevin, was very much enjoyed. Miss Austen, who has so often added to their programs as pianist, was a veritable surprise. She sang the Indian love lyric of Rimsky-Korsakoff, and "Two Roses," by Gilberte, with great purity of tone and splendid phrasing. The announcement that she would serve the club as accompanist the ensuing year brought forth loud applause. After considering the work for the year the club adjourned.

Mrs. Pershing has commenced her work as director of the Normal Park M. E. Church choir. A large and enthusiastic attendance gives promise of an interesting season. The choir has a number of good soloists and a very capable and willing organist, Mrs. Rheinbock.

Hurdy-Gurdy (Tenth and Twelfth Centuries)—The hurdy-gurdy is a stringed instrument with keys. It is played in a peculiar way. There is a handle at the tail end which is turned by the player's right hand. This handle is attached to a wheel which, being rosined, acts the same as a violin bow and sets the strings in vibration. The keys, which are similar to the pianoforte keys, are pressed on the strings to make the different tones. The hurdy-gurdy has been called rota (from its wheel). The old Latin name for a hurdy-gurdy was organistrum. This was so large that two persons were necessary to play it—one to turn the handle and the other to press the keys.

Dulcimer (Twelfth Century)—This picture shows the dulcimer in its earliest stage. Its name means "sweet music." It was played by striking the strings with two rods or sticks. It was also called the "hackbret," which means a hackboard or chopping board.

Spinet (1561)—The spinet is said to have been so called from "spina," meaning thorn, because of the tone being produced by a quill being inserted in the end of the jack. Others attribute its name to Giovanni Spinnetti, the inventor of its shape and spindling legs.

Virginal (1600)—Some say that the name virginal was intended to convey a compliment to Queen Elizabeth, the Virgin Queen (1558-1603), who was a skillful performer on the instrument. However, the instrument was really known anterior to her birth. Others say that it was so called because "maids and virgins do most commonly play upon them." At the end of the sixteenth century the virginal was the popular keyed stringed instrument of England, and was found in the home of every person of education. Mary Queen of Scots and Queen Anne both played the virginal. In the inventory of King Henry VIII mention is made of "virginals made harp fashion." The virginal became so common in England in the seventeenth century that "nearly every house had a pair of virginals in it."

Clavichord (1765)—The tone of the clavichord was delicate, soft and melancholy. John Sebastian Bach delighted in the clavichord and considered it the "best instrument for study and in general for private musical entertainments." This instrument also formed part of the baggage of Mozart when he traveled. King Henry VIII of England was a performer on the clavichord.

Harpsichord (Early Seventeenth Century)—The harpsichord received its name from the harp. It was really only a large-sized spinet. In the spinet and virginal there was only one string for each tone, while the harpsichord had two. Hans Rucker of Antwerp was the first maker of harpsichords who brought about important reforms. He gave the instrument a more powerful and connected tone and extended the compass. Haendel had a fine "Rucker" harpsichord which was a great favorite with him. It may still be seen in the South Kensington Museum in London. On it he used to accompany the opera singers, and his performances were so masterly that at times the attention of the audience was rather on the player than on the singer. One singer told Haendel that if he distracted the attention of the audience from her singing she would jump on the harpsichord and smash it. This amused Haendel, who, we know, had a bad temper, and he replied, "You will jump, will you? Very well, be so kind as to tell me when you will jump, and I will advertise it in the bills, for the people will pay more to see you jump than to hear you sing." Spinets, virginals and harpsichords were elaborately decorated with inscriptions and paintings. The virginal of Mary Queen of Scots is inlaid with cedar and richly ornamented with gold. The cover and sides are beautifully painted with figures of birds, flowers and leaves, and on one part of the lid is a procession of warriors to whom fair dames are offering wine and fruits. Old painters were fond of adorning their harpsichords. A story is told of Salvatore Rosa being found, as he was playing on a very indifferent old harpsichord, by a friend, who said to him, "Why do you keep such an old instrument in the house; it isn't worth a scudo" (an Italian dollar). Salvatore Rosa replied, "I will lay you that, but it shall be worth one thousand scudo before you see it again." A bet was made, and Rosa immediately painted a landscape with figures on the lid, which won him the bet, as it sold for more than a thousand dollars.

Pianoforte (1711)—As soon as the hammer harpsichord appeared, the pianoforte was born. An Italian by the name of Cristofori of Florence claimed the honor of inventing it in 1711. A Frenchman named Marius submitted his instruments for examination in 1716. The last claimant, Christopher Schroeter, born on the frontier of Bohemia, constructed a harpsichord in 1717 with hammers, upon which one could play piano or forte. It is singular that these three men, Cristofori, Marius and Schroeter, should have conceived the same idea within a few years of each other, and without any apparent communication.

THE ART OF SINGING SCIENTIFICALLY TAUGHT

By A. RUSS PATTERSON

The development of the voice is an exact science. It is a proven fact that the normal tone of the voice can be produced only when a perfectly balanced muscular action has been attained.

It has long been the common experience of innumerable students to find, after spending much time and money, that there is something wrong or unsatisfactory, which no one has been able to correct or explain.

The old Italian Masters, with their keen appreciation of the beautiful, brought the art of singing to a high state of development, but their lack of accurate knowledge regarding the vocal mechanism left nothing tangible upon which their successors could work.

The scientific method of voice training rejects utterly the methods heretofore in general use, which are based upon imitation, blind adherence to tradition and fanciful theories.

There is a cause for every effect and an accurate and thorough knowledge of the structure of the vocal organs enables one to analyze the pupil's voice, discover all the weaknesses which may exist and the incorrect methods of production which may have become habitual. The only good method of teaching consists of a common sense application of established truths which have proven unassailable and absolutely unfailing in the achievement of the highest results.

The correct use of the breath in the emission of tone is one of the fundamental principles of voice development. Much has been written and said on this subject, but when scientifically understood and explained, it becomes a very simple matter.

The importance of correct diction in singing cannot be overemphasized, as it is a most necessary factor in proper tone emission.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

A Visit to a City of Great Plans and Great Accomplishments—Talks With Interesting People—A Hospitable Welcome

Reviewed by MARY CARVER WILLIAMS

A recent visit paid by the chronicler to Rochester, N. Y., served to convince her of the eligibility of this city to be reckoned with as one of the finest music centers in the country. For years it has had an enviable reputation for a city of its size, but with the large plans which are now afoot it bids fair to assume a position of more importance than ever before in the list of our prominent musical cities.

Rochester musicians certainly deserve this recognition, for they have worked hard and conscientiously, and with high ideals.

Tuesday Musical Club

The Tuesday Musical Club forms an important part of the musical life of Rochester, and has just resumed activities, with Mrs. Rollo Grant at the head. The club is very active, holding twelve morning musicales, five historical morning recitals and three artist recitals during the year. Among the artists engaged last year were Florence Macbeth and the Tollefson Trio. Last year the club's membership numbered about a thousand, which is indicative of the live interest of Rochester citizens in the musical activities of the city. In addition to these the club gives five student recitals for the benefit of younger local musicians.

Mr. and Mrs. Marvin Burr

A duo of well-known and able teachers is that of Mr. and Mrs. Marvin Burr, teachers of voice. Mr. Burr is a baritone soloist, doing considerable concert work and directing a large chorus choir. Among his pupils may be named many of Rochester's most prominent church singers. Mr. Burr has studied with Shakespere, Randegger, Sbriglia, and Frank King Clark.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Burr are delightful persons to meet, and impress one immediately with the sincerity and value of their musicianship.

Institute of Musical Art

This school, whose title is, in its entirety, the University of Rochester Institute of Musical Art, has long boasted a unique course and an unusual faculty, but a recent splendid endowment given by George Eastman has placed this school in a position unparalleled by any in this country. Mr. Eastman has given, in a series of generous endowments, over three million dollars to this institution, and plans have been laid for the building of a new school in the heart of the city, to be splendidly equipped in every way. The new school is to be called the Eastman School of Music of the University of Rochester, and is to be provided with two concert halls, ten organs, and every possible equipment to aid in musical development and education. Moving pictures, with an incidental orchestra of fifty men, will be played six days a week in the school for the express purpose of raising the standard of moving picture plays and the accompanying music.

Under the same endowment, and therefore in part connection with the school, will be the Rochester Symphony Orchestra, with Arthur Alexander, conductor. Some of the best men of the country are already being engaged for this orchestra, which, it is expected, will be one of the finest in the country in personnel.

Mr. Eastman is also establishing a string quartet to be engaged solely for this purpose. Such names as Arthur Hartmann and Andre Polah are already given as engaged for this body.

It is hoped that the new building for the Eastman school will be completed by this time next year, and the school, with Mr. Alf Klingenberg, director, will be in operation before the close of the year. Further announcements regarding the progress of plans for the Eastman school will be made in our columns later.

To Friends of German Music in America

By GLENN DILLARD GUNN

"There is no nationality in art."

On this naive but plausible fiction the whole argument for the continued performance of German music in America rests. No statement more spurious has been offered a complacent and indifferent public in the whole history of German propaganda in America. There is no statement which the facts more consistently contradict.

Thus it is a fixed belief in this country that the Italians are best fitted by natural gifts and by training to produce opera, and the two great opera companies of the country are headed by Italians. Similarly it has been the belief of the country since the days of Theodore Thomas and the elder Damrosch that the German is best fitted to conduct symphony orchestra, and, acting on this belief, we have engaged Germans, or men of German training, to head our symphony orchestras, a custom upon which the war has had but slight effect.

Nor are we isolated in these beliefs. The Germans freely admit their superiority in the matter of symphonic music and argue that they have improved upon Italian conceptions of opera. The French confess to similar prejudices in regard to either form of art. The German does not hesitate to claim superiority as executive and as pedagogue in any department of the art, being fully sustained by American opinion in all that pertains to instrumental music, though there is some disposition here to believe that the human voice was discovered, if not invented, by the Italians, possibly with the assistance of the French.

In short, while the friends of German music argue for its continued performance on the ground that it is not German and that music cannot be said to belong to any nation or race exclusively, our whole musical life is organized and conducted on the assumption that certain departments of the art are the especial provinces of certain nations. We believe, not without logic, that the German is the best exponent of German music; that the Italian knows most about Italian opera; that French singers should be engaged to give French opera and that French conductors should have charge of French performances. We are so jealous of the national flavor in art that we even insist that the language of the country be suppressed and that all opera be given in the original, as being more artistic. Where the original language is impossible, as, for example, in Smetana's "Bartered Bride," we permit a translation into some other foreign language. But we look coldly upon any effort to contaminate European opera with English translations.

For the discovery that art is international we must give the friends of German music in America and England full credit. Furthermore, this discovery is so recent that the friends of German music in Germany have not yet had time to adjust themselves to it. Thus the Prince Regent Theater in Munich is dedicated "To German Art," as the inscription cut in imperishable stone above its doors explicitly states. It was here that the great Wagner cycles were given. Evidently, then, the Germans believe that the Wagner music-dramas are essentially German. So Wagner himself believed. "German opera in the German language for the German people, and cast out the foreign barbarians" was his rallying cry. It became the rallying cry of German music to the great and lasting profit of the German musician.

"But," say the friends of German music, "we offer no argument for the performance of German music-drama in German. If Wagner's music-dramas are to be given in America they should be performed in English and the 'imperialistic' works, like 'Mastersingers' and 'Walkyrie,' should not be given. Also there can be no possible objection to the performance of orchestral excerpts from Wagner's works in the concert hall, nor can one protest against Brahms, Beethoven, Schumann or Schubert. These men had no more to do with the war nor with the spirit that engendered it than had Haydn, Mozart, Bach and Handel. This is the music we have in mind when we claim that music is international."

Well and good. Yet when it suits their convenience these people can sing another tune. Thus when the old Austrian Emperor died a certain famous orchestra inserted the familiar "Kaiser" variations of Haydn in their next program, explaining that this was done out of consideration for the feelings of the many members of the orchestra who are of Austrian origin. Presumably the members of the orchestra who are of German origin found the work equally congenial, since it is to this same little Croatian tune that the Germans sing "Deutschland uber Alles." But the many Americans in the audience listened to it as a happy example of music without nationality, since, to them, it had no national significance.

Of course, the United States was not then at war with Germany and Austria and there was no reason for objecting to German music that the American public could be made to see. But the point I wish to make is that the American public, or, rather, the American portion of the musical public, is quite unconscious of nationality in music. They might recognize and thrill to "The Star Spangled Banner" as an expression of nationality, and they surely recognize as American, or at least as un-European, the syncopated idiom of Broadway. But that a Brahms symphony expresses feeling and spirit essentially German they would deny because they do not apprehend that spirit.

That is not the case with the German or with any continental European. The operas of Verdi often had political significance. Any cultured Frenchman will confess to the especial satisfaction which he derives from French music because it is French. Nor is the German less sensitive to musical expressions of his national thought and feeling. In fact, he is accustomed to use music as an expression of Germanism, as the countless German singing societies of America abundantly evidence. Music has been a factor in uniting the Germans in this country and in confirming their descendants in their belief in German customs and institutions. Therefore German music in this country has always been a part of the anti-American propaganda that has separated the Germans in America from other divisions of our population.

That the Germans have been so separated, and still are, any student of public events knows. This separation makes itself felt in business, social and political life. The man who refused to invite General Joffre and the members of the French Commission to visit Chicago on the grounds that it is the sixth German city and that to entertain the representatives of the enemy of Germany would be distasteful to the majority of the city's citizens and voters, has just had his estimate of the power of the German vote confirmed by his re-election. This would seem to constitute evidence that the Germans in Chicago feel and vote not as Americans but as Germans.

It follows that every public emphasis of German attainments in art or letters, every concession made to their language and their customs, every public expression given to their feeling and their spirit confirms them in their Germanism. The German newspapers, the German language in our schools and certainly German music featured by such conspicuous public institutions as our symphony orchestras, operas, and choral societies, are just so many rallying points for German feeling.

The most important artistic agents in stimulating and disseminating German feeling through German music have been and still are the great symphony orchestras of the country. This is natural, since artistically they are German institutions. Subtract from their repertoires all works of German origin and they would lose at one stroke a good two-thirds of their stock in trade. This is not to be construed as implying that this limitation of repertoire has served the best possible artistic growth of the country. In fact, it has tended to limit the size of the musical public, for as German opera enjoyed no great and lasting popularity in America, so the symphony orchestras have never succeeded in interesting a large portion of the music loving public.

Not more than 35,000 people annually attend the concerts of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, and this in a city of nearly 3,000,000. Probably the proportion is about the same in New York and Boston. Therefore if the influence of the symphony orchestra ended with those who actually hear it, the matter would not be worth arguing about. But despite the small size of the public actually interested, the symphony orchestras of the country, nevertheless, are representative musical institutions. They dictate the standards of the concert hall. So long as they support German music their example will be followed by the pianists, vocalists, and violinists high in public favor.

Furthermore, the unreconstructed pro-German whom we have so numerously in our midst finds aid and comfort in their example. He is confirmed in his belief in the superiority of German music, together with all other things German. This reaction of the German to the continued performance of German music is happily illustrated by the following incident which Lieut. John Philip Sousa recounts. In an interview given the representative of a Milwaukee paper the Lieutenant expressed himself as favoring the continued performance of the music of Beethoven and Wagner, which he regarded as too fine to be suppressed because we happened to be at war with modern Germany. On the day following the appearance of this interview he received from a loyal German citizen of Milwaukee the following letter:

"Thank you for condescending to continue to play the music of Beethoven and Wagner. After all, you know, it is the best."

Whereupon the Lieutenant immediately discontinued the performance of Beethoven and Wagner.

"But," argue the friends of German music in America, "how about France and England? Did not the Paris Orchestra play Beethoven on its recent tour of America? Are not the English now listening to performances of Wagner? To be sure, they give these performances in English, but so would we."

Two answers are called for. It is doubtful if the French regard Beethoven as a German composer. He was born in Germany, it is true, but his parents were not; they sprang from an old Belgian family that had its origin in Louvaine, a city which only once, and that recently and to its great sorrow, has been a German possession. He was christened Louis Van Beethoven and was accustomed so to sign himself. Recall the facsimile autograph given in Grove's Musical Dictionary. It is probable that the name Ludwig was part of the Germanizing process imposed upon him after his death. Certain it is that he had little enough of that influence during his lifetime, at least in so far as his art is concerned. His teachers were his father and Joseph Haydn, and neither was German. Nor is it possible to discover in his art elements that are typically German, in the sense that the music of Schubert, Schumann and Brahms is German.

The French attitude toward Beethoven is further explained by the fact that the orchestras of Paris, according to Richard Wagner, taught the Germans how to play Beethoven. In his great essay "On Conducting" Wagner pays extravagant tribute to the French masters of orchestra as interpreters of Beethoven, and it was due to his insistence upon French precept and example that the Germans finally became conscious of the melodic element in Beethoven's symphonies. Possibly the French orchestra also had this historic fact in mind when their programs for the American tour were arranged to include Beethoven.

As for the English performances of Wagner, they are to be justified by and for the English on two grounds. The English have no large, unassimilated pro-German element in their population, and they share our inability to recognize racial feeling in its musical expressions. To them the music of Wagner is just good music which their critics have admired extravagantly for a generation and more. Their example need not and should not influence us, at least not in this instance, and I am sure that the friends of German music in America are drawn chiefly from those divisions of the population that seldom have been inspired by English example.

As to the artistic loss which we would suffer in the exceedingly improbable event of our discontinuing German music in the concert field, that, too, has been grossly exaggerated. In the first place, the best of the music claimed by the Germans we could continue to perform on the ground that it is not German. Haydn was Croatian, and with the great and official enthusiasm for the Jugo-Slavs now manifested in America his music should enjoy renewed popularity. Mozart is played but little; far less than his music deserves. Possibly this arsises from the fact that the Germans in control of our symphony orchestras realize how characteristically Italian his music is and in view of that latter fact we need not object to it. Bach, as Harold Bauer pointed out a dozen years ago, was racially and artistically as much Hungarian as he was German. So we might keep him. Handel wrote chiefly for the English and his thematic invention was often helped by reference to a notebook full of Italian tunes.

We would have to say good-by to Schubert, a genuine loss; to Schumann, whose many technical blemishes do not quite suffice to obscure his genius; to Brahms, whom a few, but only a few, would mourn. But we can replace them with Frenchmen, Russians and Americans—yes, Americans—equally gifted. And our musical life would be the richer for it. Like the English, we have been so long under the artistic domination of the Germans that we have lost faith in our own creative and executive abilities, for the Germans do not stimulate the musical growth of peoples whom they dominate. Their whole tendency is toward the suppression of other races, not one of whom they like or trust. This is a trait not shared by the Latins, nor possibly by the Slavs, and if we still must import our art, why not try a change of masters?

Of course, I am one of those benighted

AT THE STUDEBAKER

Very evidently the Studebaker is in for a long run, for such is the charm and the success of "Take It From Me" that beyond question that gay piece could hold the boards of the Michigan Avenue house indefinitely.

One expects, in musical comedy, beautiful dressing, good dancing, an uncertain plot and bad singing, but in "Take It From Me" not only do we find the first two of these items in full flower, but also the other two in quite exceptional status.

For the plot of "Take It From Me" (in spite of its foolish name) is distinctly exhilarating.

The story is logical from beginning to end and it is clothed in diction which most certainly places Will B. Johnstone in the front rank of musical comedy librettists.

And as for the music and the presentation of it very little more could be desired.

Will R. Anderson has written some exceptionally fine solo and ensemble numbers and these he strings together in an altogether expert way.

There is a large orchestra, with splendid personnel, directed with vigor and skill by Ted Coleman and, while it is true that there is not a single exceptional solo voice in the cast, it is equally the case that all are agreeable and that the numbers are presented with true regard for musicianship.

There is no shouting, no bad rhythmic expression nor any other of the many things which, in musical comedy, so often offend those who really understand properly written and executed music.

The general presentation of the play is admirable.

There is life, movement, gayety, beauty, color, skill and plausibility in evidence continually and the movement of the scenes, the sparkle and the "go" of the dialogue and the special acts is exhilarating.

One point to be highly commended is that the list of encores allowed (or really forced as is the case too often), is much less than usual, and a catch song or act, having served its purpose of entertainment, is promptly pushed aside for something else before it has had a chance to become stale through the usual infinite number of senseless repetitions.

The cast has been chosen wisely and well and is a very long one.

There are no exceedingly well known names, but it is safe to say that there are a great many in the "Take It From Me" cast who will have long and successful careers.

It is scarcely gracious to single out any one when the general average of excellence is so marked, but, personally, the Ella Abbott of Alice Hills appealed to this writer as the most skillful piece of acting in the piece, while the personal charm of Ruth Mary Lockwood as Grace Gordon made also an immediate appeal.

The Tom Eggert of James Dyrenforth is just a little nondescript, the clowning of Fred Hillebrand comes pretty close, once or twice, to exaggeration, but Douglas Leavitt, as his partner in most of the clowning is, it seems to me, much more logical.

The scenes played by these three together, however, are full of contrast and sparkle and the "vamping" scene by Hillebrand and Zoe Barnett is good of its kind, albeit the "kind" is somewhat threadbare.

The roller skating skit of Harry Burnham is excellent and the dancing of the Gardiner Trio is exceptional, especially that of the boy.

AT THE PLAYHOUSE

The Playhouse, under its new management, and with a bill which has never been surpassed in Chicago, will undoubtedly be a big factor in the amusement life of Chicago during the coming season.

It is a beautiful place; the arrangement and management are fine; there is a splendid orchestra, organ, and each week a new soloist, in addition to which the pictures shown are of infinite variety and special charm.

Last week there was a beautiful nature picture, set to the Bryant poem, "To him who in the love of Nature," and synchronized very deftly with appropriate music.

There was a travel picture, a comique, Current Events and, last, but not least, Marguerite Clark in "Widow by Proxy."

This picture continues this week and will be succeeded next Monday by "The Miracle Man," which goes on for an indefinite run.

The soloist last week was Parnell Egan, tenor, just back from service in France and with his voice as fresh and clear as a bell.

He made a fine appearance—sang in that same impassioned way which has won him the title "the John McCormack of Chicago" and generally proved himself artistic and popular.

His reading of "The Magic of Your Voice" was delightful.

This week, Carmen Matienzo, a Spanish beauty, is singing.

THE MIRACLE MAN.

At Orchestra Hall there is now playing a very extraordinary production "The Miracle Man." Not only is the play splendidly produced, but the story is far above the usual order of motion picture plays, followed through very consistently and with unusual plausibility for the type of story that it is.

The plot is essentially moralistic, and the effect of the whole play one of uplift, though this is not at all unpleasantly in evidence. The tale is woven about the character of a fine old man who actually works miracles upon the sick and crippled with his extraordinary faith and goodness. Three men and a girl of low moral character are introduced with plans to take advantage of the old man, stage his miracles with a great flourish, and make a fortune out of them. The development of the play is in the gradual transformation of character which takes place in these four criminals under the benign and quiet influence of the "Miracle Man." And in its development the story lacks neither in action nor in romance.

A notable feature of the production was the incidental music which was done partly by Miss Mildred Fitzpatrick at the organ. Miss Fitzpatrick is admirably equipped for just this type of work and lends herself to the varying moods of the pictures with a mastery and alertness which is almost uncanny.

PATHE COMPANY SECURES TITO SCHIPA

The Pathe Phonograph Company announces to the music world a valuable addition to its list of noted artists in Tito Schipa, according to the leading critics of Italy, Spain and South America one of the finest lyric tenors that Italy has produced in a generation. This great tenor, who is a member of the Chicago Opera Association, will be heard in all his favorite roles, many of which have been recorded by the Pathe Company. Schipa possesses a purely lyric quality of voice. Its high tones ring true and clear, while his middle and lower register shows an evenness that has caused the most critical reviewers to marvel.

TITO SCHIPA

The coming of Tito Schipa to the United States has aroused unusual interest in operatic circles. His operas include "Rigoletto," "Tosca," "Traviata," "Barber of Seville," "Fra Diavola," "La Boheme," "Sonnambula," "Madame Butterfly," "Lucia," and many others. The Pathe records will give music lovers an opportunity to hear this famous young singer before the opera season starts. His voice records such as few singers, and every record is a masterpiece of song.

LYELL BARBER

On the opening day of the Illinois Lyceum Association Convention, which took place at the La Salle Hotel, a concert was given in which Lyell Barber assumed an important role. He appeared in a solo group, playing the following numbers: "C Sharp Minor Fantasy" (Chopin), "Lotus Land" (Cyril Scott) and "Impromptu," F Minor (Poldini). The Chopin "Fantasy" was particularly brilliant and effective and "Lotus Land" perfect in its impressionistic delicacy. Mr. Barber is an artist "sui generis" in finesse and artistic feeling

In addition to his solo group he played sympathetic and splendidly intelligent accompaniments for Miss Vera Poppe, celliste, and Miss Margery Maxwell, soprano.

OLGA CARRARA-ASTOLFO PESCIA

It has been reiterated that unless a student goes abroad he cannot obtain the successes one would dream about. Naturally this is a statement falsely asserted because many of our native talents have not gone abroad and still they have achieved triumphs either in Opera or in the Concert field. Let us pause for a moment and think of such names as Alma Gluck, Anna Case, Sophie Braslau, etc. If the assertion that native talents cannot climb the heights of an artistic career unless they go abroad be correct, what about the Latin vocal pedagogues who have deserted their native lands to follow their vocations in America? In this latter class Chev. Astolfo Pescia holds a unique position among the vocal teachers not only of New York but of America. Thanks to his high abilities and to his honest principles in the art of vocalization he has succeeded in proving that a pupil can be trained at home as well as in any part of the universe.

Mr. Pescia is not an inventor of methods in principles; he is not an extemporaneous manufacturer of theories; he does not teach the method of Mr. and Mrs. Y and X, as many of the teachers indulge in; the only principle he believes in is to teach how to sing well. Those who have had the fortune to listen to his artist pupil, Madame Olga Carrara, have already had the conviction of his excellent ability as a teacher. This splendid Italian soprano has made four appearances at the Stadium Concerts and not only the New York press but the Boston dailies have recognized in her the possessor of an unusual quality soprano voice. Possessed of the Latin temperament, having also to her credit superb phrasing and clear enunciation, she exhibited all these qualities in the two performances of "Aida," given on August 5 and August 15. On August 27 she excelled in the performance of "Trovatore," bringing out clearly the unusual features of a soprano comparable to many of the best vocalists of the day. As a concert singer and as an interpreter of English songs, she again displayed her gifts and versatility on the occasion of her appearance as soloist with the Stadium Symphony Orchestra on the evening of September 1. It is interesting to add the following comment from the Christian Science Monitor of Boston:

"The night brought forward a soprano, Madame Olga Carrara, who gave promise of winning important recognition as a dramatic singer. She has a rich, powerful and expressive voice, which she uses as one who is well schooled."

Madame Olga Carrara will have the opportunity to demonstrate before the American audiences that teaching at home is just as efficient as abroad and, besides, she will again strengthen the beautiful impression she left on the Stadium audiences. During the season 1919-20 she will appear in important musical events.

FLORENCE MITCHELL RESUMES CLASSES

Florence Mitchell, the well-known contralto and teacher of singing, resumed her classes at her studio, 2241 Dayton street, this week. During the fall a number of her pupils will be heard in recital. Mrs. Mitchell is an ardent advocate of the art of singing English correctly and her pupils splendidly demonstrate her ability to impart this knowledge.

CHICAGO PIANO COLLEGE

The Chicago Piano College, located in Kimball Hall, has begun its twenty-fifth season under most favorable conditions; enrollments being very satisfactory and school interest high, a most successful year being assured.

The recital season at this school will begin Saturday, October 4, a varied program by advanced students being scheduled for that afternoon in the College lecture room, 927 Kimball Hall.

The Saturday afternoon recital hour this season will be at 2:15 promptly.

CLARENCE EDDY

Clarence Eddy, the distinguished American organist, is to give a recital at Kimball Hall on Tuesday evening, October 14, which without doubt will be one of the most brilliant of the early season events and one of the most indicative of the entire season.

A program of unusual value and charm has been prepared, which will be printed in Music News next week.

Mr. Eddy, who has just scored a phenomenal success in the two recitals given in Omaha, will play a program on September 29 at the First M. E. Church in Fairmont, W. Va., and on the 30th at Wheeling.

He has numerous engagements throughout October and November.

EDWARD EILERT

Edward Eilert, a baritone of splendid voice and rare musical intelligence, who has made a fine success in Chicago church circles and as Song Director at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, has gone to New York, where he will enter the church and concert field.

The accompanying picture is one that should have been used in connection with our report of the Lockport National American Music Festival, but which arrived too late.

Mr. Eilert proved to be one of the most popular of the young artists at Lockport and, as reported in Music News last week, his two concert appearances there were pronounced successes.

IDELLE PATTERSON

The combination of a beautiful voice, personality and individual attractiveness is rare, but it is represented in delightful proportions in the captivating and winsome young soprano, Idelle Patterson.

The conspicuous success that this popular young singer has achieved and the prominent place that she occupies among the foremost American artists, are justified by her unusual attainments, which are happily united with native grace and personal magnetism.

Her voice is a lyric soprano of exceptional color, range and flexibility, and the ease and skill with which she employs it enables her to encompass a wide variety of composition.

Miss Patterson's art is wonderfully proportioned and is distinguished by its individuality and earnestness of purpose.

The recognition accorded her, both by the public and by the press, is an eloquent tribute to her artistic ability.

Miss Patterson has made joint appearances in concert with the following well-known artists and musical organizations:

Eugene Ysaye, Leopold Godowsky, Pablo Casals, Fritz Kreisler, Mischa Elman, Arthur Shattuck, Ethel Leginska, Hipolito Lazaro, David Bispham, Raoul Vidas, Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra (eight weeks' tour, 1918), Victor Herbert's Orchestra, Biltmore Friday Morning Musicals, New York Rubinstein Club, Beethoven Society of New York, Mozart Society of New York, Eclectic Club of New York, New York Liederkranz, Swedish Glee Club of New York, Maine Festival (1918).

PEARL LA ROCHE

Rarely has this writer heard a more delightful children's recital than that given by a dozen or more of Pearl La Roche's intermediate pupils last Sunday afternoon. The children were, without exception, excellently prepared, and played with ease and accuracy. Miss La Roche has the rare insight to give her students pieces which do not exceed their technical preparation, but lend themselves in mood and content to the individual abilities of the children. Good taste was shown throughout in the selection of the numbers and the children evinced an unusual interest in their work and a grace and facility which was very charming. Miss La Roche is further to be congratulated upon the simplicity and unaffected way in which the entire program was staged. The attention of children and listeners was plainly upon the worth of the work, not the display of it.

LOUISE BOEDTKER

A charming young American singer is Louise Boedtker, soprano, who is pictured on our cover page this week.

Miss Boedtker was the winner in the prize competition in voice at the recent American Music Festival at Lockport, N. Y., and made two very successful concert appearances there.

Added to a most pleasing personality and unusual intelligence, Miss Boedtker has a voice of rare charm and power, and in the opinion of many she is destined for a splendid singing career.

At her every appearance in Chicago she has scored heavily and her prospects for the immediate future are rosy.

She has had splendid training and is in possession of a good repertoire, and with youth, good looks and fine management to back up her splendid vocal gifts she is bound to rise very rapidly. C. E. W.

A LITTLE GENIUS IN THE BUD

Looking upon the world gravely with his great, dark eyes, little Taras Alexandrovitch Votichenko, the three-year-old son of the famous composer, chatters French to his mother, issues commands to his father in wonderful tongue-twisting Russian, wheedles his nurse in soft Italian and addresses the stranger always in English.

He seldom makes the mistake of using the wrong language for the wrong person, although if you ask him to speak in French he hasn't the remotest idea of what you mean. To him, French is simply the words that mother understands. Russian is papa's especial means of communication, Italian is just the queer way nurse has of saying things, and English is for any one who happens to live outside of his immediate family circle.

When Taras was only two years old it was said that he spoke five languages, but was master of none. Today he makes himself understood perfectly in four different tongues, while his fifth accomplishment is just a smattering of Spanish words, the result of once having lived for a short time in a Spanish house.

But what is it to Taras Alexandrovitch that he speaks French, Russian, English, Spanish and Italian—a fellow has to make himself understood! To be sure, his case presents peculiar difficulties, but he accepts them quite as a matter of course, and it is doubtful if he realizes that other newcomers to this world are considered prodigies by their adoring parents if they can make themselves even partially understood in one queer, babbling dialect of infancy.

Movie Music and Joseph Carl Breil

Joseph Carl Breil holds the distinction of being the first composer in the history of moving pictures to be called upon to compose a complete score for a photoplay. That was some years ago, when for Daniel Frohman he wrote the accompanying score to "Queen Elizabeth," with Sarah Bernhardt as queen. It was scored for an orchestra of twenty men, and was presented in most of the large cities from Boston and New York to San Francisco. Since then he has adapted and composed music to many pictures. Among them are "The Birth of a Race," "Intolerance," "Cabiria," and "The Lost Battalion," the latter probably the greatest photoplay ever produced.

During the screen rehearsals of "The Lost Battalion" Mr. Breil found a few moments to talk on the subject of motion picture music. He said: "The automobile and motor industry compares with the motion picture industry in the revolutionary effects exerted upon the general trend in human affairs. And in its far-reaching ramifications the motion picture excels that of the motor car. Not only does it attract capital for investment, and spur on inventors to devise new mechanical devices; it excites scientists to discover unknown laws of nature, and supplies the countless thousands a comfortable livelihood. It also adds to the comfort and pleasure of many millions more than does the motor industry.

"What is more, it enters into the artistic realm, and tends to the general human uplift. Poets and dramatists, fiction writers and actors, even newspapers, have turned to it as the newest and most expressive form of expression, having a language that can be universally understood.

"When dramatists turned their attention to this field it was quite natural that musicians would follow. As the short stories were presented on the screen in a dark house, it was soon determined that something must supply the missing spoken word.

"Pianists and orchestras were called upon to do this. Some of them played music quite fitted to the moods of the picture at times, but only at times, while others jarred the senses of audiences by playing most inappropriate things. This taught managers and producers that something more effective must be done. Atmosphere must be created.

"Thus came the composers' turn, and a new form of art has sprung up.

"Still it may be debated whether it is really a new form of art. To speak truthfully it is rather a new application and development of what has generally been termed 'program music.'

"The term program music implies musical expression or description of moods, emotions, situations, scenes or actions; imitations of human cries, sounds in nature, and by means of musical effects such as consonances and dissonances, descriptions of rest or motion, pleasure or pain, relaxation or vibrating action.

"Motion picture music is essentially program music, for it is a commentary and illustration of the play, entirely subservient to the action presented. It should be subtle, suggestive and seductive.

"The best musical accompaniment to a photoplay is that which is so much a part of the picture itself that the spectator perceives it only as a sort of subtle or seductive accompaniment of the mood.

"It should be at once descriptive, graphic and eloquent. When this is missing, a spectator, if he is at all sensitive, may not be able to determine at once why he has been subjected to a jarring sensation, but if he has the power of analysis he will likely trace the unpleasant moments of a picture drama to the defective music.

"With these points in view, it can be seen that a new impetus is given by the motion picture industry to musical composition, and since in this country little encouragement has been given to writers of dramatic and polyphonic music in the old forms of opera and symphony, it behooves composers and students to turn their attention to this development, for moving picture music is nothing more than a combination of both those forms of art, with perhaps a slight suppression of the attainment and full development of the strict forms of composition. Still our modern composers have all more or less aimed to break these shackles, and therefore it would seem that picture plays offer the best field of all, especially to writers who like to break traces.

"As to music as adapted and presented in the ordinary moving picture house little commendatory can be said. Many directors lack a sense of dramatic propriety in the selection of programs. But this, perhaps, is because music publishers so far have failed to attract their attention to good real dramatic and descriptive music. Some have published motion picture books of music, but of all these only one or two are worthy any consideration, and they are for the most part excerpts from the works of composers who lived before the days of Wagner and the "Leit-Motif," when the diminished seventh was considered the strongest and most dramatic chord. Little really dramatic music is in these collections, and many times even that is of the old style incidental music so commonly associated with the melodrama of a generation ago.

"What is really needed is new and original music consonant with the various human emotions, descriptive of both big and tumultuous scenes, as also the finer sides of human life, and so construed as to easily be adapted either at length or briefly to the quick flickerings on the screen. It cannot be long now till some such work will appear. The demand for it is great."

THE PRESS AT LARGE

In this division of Music News there will be printed, week by week, comments on various concerts and artists which have appeared in the daily and weekly press of the country. This is done in the belief that this matter will be found to be of great interest to a large number of people. This is in no sense an advertising department, and no items will be accepted for pay

Here's Practicality

Henriette Weber writes as follows in the Chicago Herald-Examiner:

Now that the poor duck of a music student is about to be exposed to another year of musical training, would it not be well for the music schools to consider solemnly the great question of business efficiency?

The training offered secures proficiency in playing or singing, occasionally—very occasionally—real proficiency in musicianship, and practically never any definite preparation for the problems that confront the pupil as soon as he is dismissed as a graduate. There are far too many lame ducks.

The student has no idea how to market his wares, or to create interest in what there is to offer. The business of a career is absolutely a closed book, and only after years of mistakes, costly in the extreme, does he get any business sense at all.

Now it would seem that it is almost the duty of our large schools to undertake this phase of their students' training. To be sure, the schools with a large clientele and big reputation are able to "place" always a number of their graduates who are fitted for special teaching positions, and advice to individuals is given generously.

But the boy or girl who, after a long period of study, wants to play or sing for a living gets no definite help. One can see that easily enough by the helpless way in which they try to get on in a field which even under the best conditions is a difficult one to hoe.

Some plain talks by a business man on how to take your pigs to market and how to get a fair price for them after you get them there should be included in every up-to-date music school.

"Keep Smiling," Says May Peterson

"When your friends say you are sure to make a success—it's time to look out," said May Peterson, prima donna, of the Metropolitan, on her arrival at Tacoma for her concert at the Stadium. "Go out and try your goods and when you have exhausted one field, try another. Of course, when your own mother and father hear you sing, they contemplate a second Melba and tell you so, but—watch out," said the singer.

"I'm crazy about my work—I love it," she enthused. "It is impossible to get to the top, for you would exhaust everything, and you can't do this. And let me say that no success is attained overnight.

"Keep on working always—if you keep on trying you will get the big line and then you'll get success. You can't help it. Be sure of yourself, but never let conceit creep in, for when it does you stand still, and then there is no progress."

When asked what she considered the most necessary and useful attribute in life, the dainty singer tapped a small satin-clad pump on the tiled floor of the Tacoma Hotel, puckered her lovely mouth a moment and said very definitely:

"Smiles. Smile when you don't want to and you will always be happy. Why, it isn't right to let other people see you worry. They have enough of their own. Give of your best and you will get ten times as much as you give. The best will always come back to you, and you are bound to find out it was only a passing cloud, after all.

"All business has some worry, but it never hurts us. Use optimism and sunshine when it rains—and it will never rain," vowed Miss Peterson.

Clad in an effective white embroidered gown with a chic blue sash and wearing an irregular soft blue picture hat, "The Golden Girl of the Metropolitan," as Miss Peterson is called, was a very pretty picture. Her hair is golden, her eyes are like stars, and she has the most fascinating and contagious smile possible. The interviewer couldn't refrain from questioning the artist on her idea of dress.

"I think all people should look their best at all times," she said, "and should dress in keeping with their work, their position and with their own individuality. In concert work, when the number demands, the artists should sacrifice themselves if necessary to dress to the occasion. Be artistic but dignified."

Much of this great singer's success has been due, according to her version, to necessity. She did not work because she was fond of working or because it was a passing fancy, but because it was a case of bread and butter.

"My father instilled into each of his children the need of accomplishing something and the fact that they must represent him in some one thing. He set a standard for us," and the humbleness of the great was manifested in this little woman who has acquired so much when she said, "and I'm afraid I haven't reached that standard yet."

When questioned concerning the combination of marriage and a career, the famous artist, who is married only to her art, said: "Yes, in some cases, of course, it works and is very successful; but it always seemed to me that it should wait until after you have established yourself. You can't concentrate on two things and be wholly successful; and in my case necessity made me think that I owed much to myself and to my family.

"I love a home and children and all that sort of thing, though," said Miss Peterson. She is fond of reading and especially likes Ibsen and Maeterlinck.

"The war has been awakening us in America and we are becoming alive to the necessity for music. As it is always the thing we have to do that we accomplish, we will become proficient in this line, too. Community sings are especially good. They make you joyous, and why not let it out. Get relief through song," said Miss Peterson.

Miss Peterson is inaugurating the Scandinavian songs in this country and plans on doing some special work along this line in the Fall, with the help of Dr. Hoving of New York. She sees an immense future in the introduction of this kind of music and it is hoped to get a conductor from Stockholm.

Miss Peterson has been singing since she was seven years old. Her father being an evangelist, she said she directed choirs when she was eight years old.

"I thought I knew everything then—I was so confident—and now I know that what I really know is very little indeed," said the prima donna.—Tacoma Daily Ledger.

Mabel Corlew Smith at Lockport

The Lockport (N. Y.) Union-Sun and Journal of September 5 comments as follows:

Mabel Corlew Smith, the favorite of last night's Festival, topped the list for the evening. While a splendid artist last year, it must be said that this singer has gained both in style and voice during the past season. It would be hard to imagine a better recital artist than Mrs. Smith. Her queenly presence, so delightful to watch, is matched by the excellence of her voice and interpretations. An absolute breath control makes it possible for her to change the dynamics of a song instantly, which is an interpretative asset not realized by all singers.

Frederick Vanderpool's "A Song for You" deserves especial mention. Also the song cycle, "Songs of the Seasons," by Hallett Gilberte. The words for this cycle were written by the composer's wife, Mrs. Anne Gilberte. Mr. Gilberte furnished an excellent accompaniment, and the burst of applause which greeted the close of the number speaks well for its future popularity.

It was a great pleasure to welcome again Mrs. Smith and note the improvement since last season in her always beautiful work. She has rare vocal and temperamental gifts and is as charming to see as to hear. Her luscious, warm-toned dramatic voice rang out delightfully in songs by Pearl Curran, Lester, Vanderpool, Fay Foster, Densmore and Gilberte. The Curran song, "Dawn," and the cycle, "Songs of the Season," by Gilberte, with this composer's "Spring Serenade" as encore, were particularly effective pieces on Mrs. Smith's program. However, she beautifies whatever she sings, and Mr. Gilberte's aid at the piano in his own always charming music gave added pleasure.

At Lockport

The Musical Courier representative did not hear the address of Mme. Von Klenner on Saturday evening, and asked Mary M. Howard, critic of the Buffalo Express, to forward an account to this office. Following is Miss Howard's review:

"Mme. Von Klenner is a personality, a veritable dynamo in her energy and quick play of thought and wit. She has held many offices of prominence, among them a seven-year presidency of the New York Woman's Press Club. She is second vice president of the Commonwealth Opera Club and one of the three women directors of the Society president. She made a telling appeal in behalf of Music. She is especially identified with the National Opera Club of America, of which she is founder and president. She made a telling appeal in behalf of opera in English, opera by Americans for Americans.

"A few years ago the National Opera Club, an incorporated institution, was organized with twenty members. Now there are over 2,000, and in the name of this club Mme. Von Klenner made the offer of a $100 prize for a one-act opera for a small cast, by an American composer, the opera to be produced at the American National Music Festival of next year, with the manager's permission, which was given instantly and enthusiastically by Mr. Van de Mark.

"Great applause greeted Mme. Von Klenner's fine offer, the first one to be made at these festivals as a monetary incentive to American composers."Musical Courier.

MARIE SIDENIUS ZENDT

At a recent session of a certain famed exposition held at the Coliseum Mme. Marie Zendt appeared in two groups of songs in conjunction with the Edison Symphony Orchestra, that far-famed "band" whose services turned out to be a charity. Be that as it may, Mrs. Zendt made an exceedingly favorable impression in songs which suited both her own voice and the time and place of her appearance. She opened her first group with that ever and increasingly popular song, "Values" (Vanderpool), which she sang with dramatic fervor. In addition to this she sang "The Nightingale" (Ward-Stephens), "Lo, Here the Gentle Lark" (Bishop), "The Heart Call" (Vanderpool), and "Madrigal," written by Harold Hammond, a Chicago composer, who accompanied her sympathetically and artistically. Mr. Hammond, though himself a layman, is well known in art circles of this city for his talent and versatility. The song which Mrs. Zendt did at this time was original and written with style and skill. Mrs. Zendt sang "Annie Laurie" by request as an encore and was honored with a genuine ovation.

JOSEPH BONNET

Joseph Bonnet is vacationing at present near Biaritz, near the Spanish border. The following is quoted from a letter recently received by Mr. Herbert Hyde:

"The scenery is most marvelous, a combination of ocean, Pyrenees and fertile country, most picturesque old churches and homes."

THE HINSHAW CONSERVATORY

This institution opened September 15, with an unusually large enrollment, far surpassing expectations.

The Hinshaws have enrolled a number of very talented pupils from different parts of the country who are especially desirous of making preparation for the Lyceum and Chautauqua fields.

The producing department of the Hinshaw Conservatory is one of unusual activity; in fact, they have more calls for organized companies than it is possible to supply for this season's Lyceum.

EMORY L. GALLUP

RETURN OF MARCHIA KELLY STEWART

Marchia Kelly Stewart, one of the finest of accompanists, and very popular in Chicago, has returned here after an absence of nearly two years and will again be in the field for all sorts of public work as coach and accompanist.

EPIPHANY ORGAN RECITALS

The season of organ recitals at the Church of the Epiphany, Ashland boulevard and Adams street, Chicago, will commence on Sunday evening, October 5, at 8 o'clock, when Dr. Francis Hemington will play a program of compositions by Bach, Widor, Mendelssohn and others. The organ at Epiphany Church has been overhauled during the summer and is now in excellent condition. It is notable for the great beauty of its voicing, and Dr. Hemington, who has presided at this instrument for more than twenty-one years, claims that in tonal qualities no instrument excels Epiphany organ.

NOTES FROM STEVENSON STUDIO

The Geranlen Trio, composed of Gertrude Farrell, Helen Mueller, and Anna Braun, and Raymond Harmon, tenor, return to Chicago September 28, after a ten weeks' Chautauqua trip.

Miss Elizabeth Gilbert has resumed teaching at the Pittsburg, Kan., State Manual Training Normal, where she is head of the vocal department.

ERIC DE LAMARTER

At the Fourth Presbyterian Church last Thursday afternoon Mr. De Lamarter presented an unusually well-chosen program, including such numbers as Leo Sowerby's "Comes Autumn Time" and a brand new suite of his own, "hot off the griddle," and with an excellent "flavor."

This week the program is to be given by Walter P. Zimmerman, organist of the First Christian Science Church.

FRIENDS OF GERMAN MUSIC

Americans who believe that the best artistic interests, like the best commercial interests of the country, are served by developing our own resources; that artistic independence is nearly as important as industrial or political independence. Not so my average fellow countryman interested in the art who believes he must go to Europe to learn; or, if he cannot go to Europe, then he had best go to the nearest European. Who among his fellow countrymen is going to listen to him when he has completed his studies, if this state of mind persists and there are Europeans to be heard, he does not stop to inquire about. Or, failing that, who will study with him, he asks not.

It has been noted in the concerts of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra that with regular and continued representations of American composers, the public gradually has developed a definite interest in native music. It also has been noted that the patrons of this orchestra no longer exhibit great enthusiasm for the standard German works of symphonic literature. So it is entirely possible that what the friends of German music and other German influences estimate as an irreparable artistic loss would prove a definite gain with the general public.

The French orchestra taught us some interesting things about orchestral art, things that a generation of listening to German orchestras have not taught us. Theirs is not the disciplined, precise art that the spirit of Germany has developed. Their orchestras are conducted with belief in the imagination and initiative of the individual player considered as an important factor in artistic expression. The results of this ideal of orchestral interpretation were most attractively revealed by the Paris orchestra on the occasion of its American tour in 1918-19. Their strings played with greater freedom and beauty of tone than we have been accustomed to hear from America's Germanized orchestras. Their wood-winds were infinitely more pliable, their brasses more brilliant. These factors worked astonishing results in the department of interpretation, displaying inspiring differences that indicate lessons of the greatest value which might accrue to American music by closer contact with French orchestral art, precisely as was the case with Wagner half a century ago.

But, as said before, the symphony orchestras of the country address no large public, though their supporters are drawn from the influential and the well-to-do among American music lovers. Curiously enough, the German element has not distinguished itself by supporting our Germanized symphony orchestras, the reason being, probably, that the Germans in this country have been preoccupied, musically speaking, with their own especial activities. These are concerned almost entirely with their singing societies, so-called. One says so-called advisedly, for while the Germans do sing in the strict meaning of the word, their manner of vocal expression is peculiarly their own, a circumstance which a wide experience with its characteristics prompts one to believe is not an unmitigated misfortune. Thus a critic with a gift for pungent simile described the choral efforts of a large body of German singers as resulting "in great vats of tone." The reaction of the average American music lover to German choral art as practiced in this country could not have apter definition. For this reason, doubtless, the Germans in America have never succeeded in winning for their choral music the support of the American.

Not that this has discouraged the German, for his singing societies have not been conducted primarily for artistic purposes, but rather to maintain the political and social cohesion of the Germans themselves. Nor is it wise to depreciate the influence that they have exerted in this direction. Both numerically and spiritually the German singing societies are a force with which the friends of Americanization will yet have to contend. The German colony in Chicago is usually estimated at three-quarters of a million. Ten years ago New York's German population was larger by some 200,000.

There are over three thousand members of German singing societies in Chicago. These people are actively engaged in the perpetuation of German song and all that German song implies in the matter of German feeling. There are not one thousand members of choruses devoted to the study of music having a wider interest and practicing the English language. Judging by the attendance attracted by the concerts of the German singing societies each singer represents five people who share passively in the Germanizing activities of these organizations. Furthermore, the German singing societies are quite as active in smaller communities, in many of which they represent the only sustained musical effort. Therefore, it may be profitable to examine the literature which these societies exploit with a view to ascertaining its spirit and in consequence its relation to the eventual Americanization of this large element of the population.

German singing societies confine themselves almost exclusively to the simple folk songs of the fatherland, which it is their purpose to keep alive in the heart of the exile. And what is the spirit of these songs? It is sufficiently defined by such a text as the following:

"What is the German's Fatherland?
Now name to me that mighty land!

"Where'er the German tongue resounds
And praises God with joyous sounds
This shall it be! This shall it be!
This, brave German, belongs to thee!"

No more complete and illuminating expression of the German's attitude toward his music, his language and himself in relation to America can be found. Viewed in the American setting, considered as the habitual emotional expression of so large a portion of our population, the subject becomes distasteful and the whole problem of the German and his singing society disquieting to comfort-loving, self-absorbed Americans.

For whatever the theme of his song, to the member of the German Singverein or Liedertafel it speaks always with the voice of the fatherland. It chants of the Neckar and the Rhein, of the Saale and the Elbe. It praises the beauties of Thuringian hills and Schwabian forests. It magnifies German virtues and glorifies German customs. It weaves for him a glamour about every recollection of the homeland. It hallows every tradition. No song is so persistently and consistently national as is the folk song of Germany. Even the songs of conviviality have the persistent German flavor. Thus the text of the little waltz tune that Robert Schumann took as the theme for the finale of his piano pieces entitled "Papillons" reads as follows:

"As my Grandfather my Grandmother wed
Of Madam and Mam'selle they'd never heard said,
Then maidens lived meekly in mothers' control,
And both were true Germans in body and soul."

A lengthy catalogue of these texts would prove tedious reading, nor would it add to the strength of the argument save by repetition. But there is still a point to be made. These texts are sung. That means that their crudeness wears the attractive masque of melody. That their sentiment is re-enforced with the incomparable eloquence of song. The American in the mass is vociferously but not eloquently vocal. He reiterates the songs of the gutter. One tune suits him as well as another provided it can be "ragged" or "jazzed." He never sings the old songs if there are new ones, and the manufacturers of tin-pan alley keep him well supplied.

The American has only three songs of home. The German has a hundred. The American has not more than a dozen songs that carry a definite patriotic message, and of these only "Dixie" has a real punch. Every German folk song is patriotic. In every German choral speaks the spirit of "Deutschland uber Alles." It is difficult for us to realize what these songs mean to the German. There is no parallel in our own life. But it is easy to see what their continued practice means to the Americanization of these people. No influence could be invoked, no propaganda evolved by Berlin that would more surely sustain and confirm them in their Germanism. Printing newspapers in their language, studying it in our grammar grades, even imparting all instruction in it will not do more toward keeping our Germans German than will the continued practice of their songs. For all these things reach the mind, but song speaks to the heart, and "as a man thinketh in his heart, so he is."

At that it is comforting to reflect that time and the force of environment had begun to tell upon German loyalty to German song before the war, and the subsequent defeat of the fatherland caused it to blaze up with renewed fanaticism. Just now we have to deal with many irritating manifestations of that spirit in German music. Thus by way of ratifying the election of Mayor Thompson the citizens of "the sixth German city" gave a "Frühjars Konzert" which all the prominent Germans in Chicago attended, as did the grateful representatives of the City Hall. Wounded American soldiers had the pleasure of listening to the strains of "The Lorelei" and other charming German folk songs which the lusty singers made audible even outside the walls of the theater.

ROBERT LOREN QUAIT, Tenor Concert, Oratorio Recitals

Probably these concerts will be repeated in other cities. But it is well to remember that the national union of German singing societies had decided to recognize the language of the country in their concerts shortly before the war. Now, with the general population's traditional indifference to the charms of the German language changed to active resentment, it is probable that they will be moved to renew that concession. And that will be the beginning of the end for the German singing societies.

In the meantime it were well to give these ardent and thorough Germans no comfort in the typically American circles of the symphony orchestra. These representative organizations should set an example as well as a standard. For once an obvious political duty has all the charm of an interesting artistic adventure, for that is what a season or two of symphony concerts minus the standard German repertory would amount to. Or, to put it another way, this exotic art in which a few cultured Americans have long indulged themselves, has suddenly acquired political significance.

Oh, yes! About Wagner. As the first of Germany's "imperialistic" composers, he should be suppressed, for it was he who first made Germany conscious of the fact that her song was a great nationalizing force. Therefore in the minds of all men loyal to Germany his music has greater national significance than any other that could be played. Furthermore, he is the most popular German composer outside his own country, and a great many perfectly good Americans, Englishmen, Frenchmen and Italians greatly admire his art.

Nevertheless, his music should be abandoned in theater and concert hall, and these good people should make the sacrifice imposed upon them thereby in the interest of the public welfare. For Wagner was the Prince Eitel of composers. As James Huneker states the case, "He plundered the rich storehouse of Liszt's art" quite as ruthlessly as the Kaiser's son robbed France and Belgium for their art treasures. He was a great technician, a great artist and a great plagiarist, as every well-informed musician knows. Therefore, why not replace his works in the programs of our symphony orchestras with the symphonic poems of Franz Liszt, who, as every one should know, was Hungarian. Thus the admirers of Wagner might hear the art they have learned to love in its original forms, so much freer and more beautiful than in their several Wagnerian developments, and at the same time a great artistic wrong would be in some measure righted.

Urelio Bodini, Tenor of Metropolitan, Ordered Barred as Contract Laborer by Immigration Authorities

Urelio Bodini, the operatic tenor, who arrived last week from Italy on the liner Caserta and was sent to Ellis Island by the immigration authorities, has been ordered excluded by the board of special inquiry. It is held that he is a contract laborer, and as such cannot be admitted to this country. Bodini has appealed to the Secretary of Labor at Washington, asserting that he is an artist and sings small parts in operas when called upon, in addition to being in the chorus. He told members of the board at Ellis Island that he has a repertoire of forty operas, and can sing in French and English, as well as in Italian.

He testified that his contract wages with the Metropolitan Opera Company were fifteen dollars a week, independent of any extra money earned by singing in small roles.

Bodini is the first singer, an immigration official said, to be detained under a new ruling made by the Secretary of Labor at Washington. Formerly all the chorus people from abroad have been classified as artists, not as contract laborers. The ruling permits artists like Enrico Caruso to land, but excludes less noted singers.

If the decision in regard to Bodini is upheld in Washington, it means that many of the Italian members of the Metropolitan Opera Company and the Chicago Grand Opera Company will not be allowed to land when they arrive next month.

Signor Bodini, it was announced later, was released on parole.

First Appearance of the Vatican Choirs

For the first time in history, outside of Rome, we have been privileged to listen to the much-heralded Vatican choirs from the Patriarchal Roman Basilicas. On Thursday evening, September 18, Carnegie Hall was packed by an audience of worshipers and representatives of the Catholic churches. To give it a certain festive and official air, the concert enjoyed the auspices of the City of New York. Mayor Hylan delivered a brief address and presented also to the choir and its leader, Maestro Raffaele Casimiro Casimimi, the flag of the City of New York. It may be true that Italy possesses beautiful voices, but the Vatican choirs can hardly be termed a sensational feature for America. The advance publicity exaggerated the quality of the organization, and if the choirs are, indeed, worthy of praise, I failed to be stirred. The voices of the boys were only fair, and the singing was often crude and without co-ordination. If comparisons are permitted, I do not fear contradiction when I assert that the American boys of the Paulist choir are superior by far, although the voices of the Vatican choirs exhibited good qualities.

When we speak of choral societies we must not forget that England still holds first honors in this branch of music. Many of our oratorio organizations are in some respects superior to the one which is visiting us just now. The program embraced Palestrina, Tomasso, Ludovico Grossi and Casimiro Raffaele Casimiri. Whether the worshiper is somewhat phlegmatic or undemonstrative, the applause was not enthusiastic. The leader of the choirs (some seventy-five voices) responded briefly after the presentation of the flag, and one or two of the boys kissed it.

Germans Applaud Satire on Allies and United States

A musical sketch in which the Allies were satirized in song for the alleged forcing of an unjust peace on Germany was performed for the first time last night at John Thiessen's "Alt Heidelberg" Restaurant, 130 Third avenue. To an audience consisting mainly of Germans the character representing Germany concluded the sketch by declaring that, although he had signed the peace, it would not be long before he would rise again.

Hugo Brucken was the author of the piece, which was a potpourri consisting of tunes of old musical comedies with those of the anthems of the allied countries and one or two German songs set to words telling of the story of the dispute of some farmers.

The characters were: John Buller, representing England; Mme. Rachesuss (Mme. Revenge Sweet), representing France; Joseph Treubruchnudel (Joseph Spaghetti Truth Breaker), and Michael Bauer, representing Germany. The name of the piece was an old German proverb, "Many dogs mean the death of the hare" ("Viele hunde sind des hasen tod").

The sketch opened with John Buller, played by Brucken, boasting of the part he had played in a dispute with Bauer, another farmer, over whom he gained a victory. Treubruchnudel enters and asks for his share of the winnings, but is berated by Buller, who tells him that if he is not satisfied, "There is the door." Whereupon Treubruchnudel bewails his lot and is sorry that he broke with his former allies. "Thanklessness is the world's reward," he exclaims.

Buller, in a song to Mme. Rachesuss, admits that he was beaten until Joe Onkelreich (the United States) entered the scene. Bauer declares that he lost through the "injustice and cunning" of Buller, and for no other reason

"You cannot be proud of what you did," he says; "you were four and I was alone."

Buller remarks that the spoils must be divided before it is too late, and orders Germany to sign a paper. Thereupon Bauer, singing "I will sign because you force me," to the tune of "Lorolet," signs the document, remarking at the same time, "So that's what you call justice. I will sign, but my heart is not in it."

Buller sternly says that Bauer is to blame for the entire dispute, while the latter makes a vigorous disclaimer, saying that he was not alone at fault, but that he was hated for his achievements.

"Many dogs mean the death of the hare," Bauer cries, and the piece ends as he exclaims: "Even the best person cannot live in peace if it does not suit the bad neighbor to permit him to."

An audience that filled the restaurant witnessed the performance and applauded appreciatively the sentiments of the play. It is planned to present the piece every night.

Julia Heinrich Killed

Miss Julia Heinrich, soprano, formerly of the Metropolitan Opera Company, was instantly killed at Hammond, La., last week, when she was struck by a baggage truck which was knocked from the Illinois Central tracks by a locomotive.

Miss Heinrich, who made her home in New York, was born in Philadelphia, the daughter of Max Heinrich, a well-known baritone and composer. Her father early saw possibilities in her soprano voice and trained her himself so that she was able to make a successful debut in grand opera with the Hamburg Opera Company. She later returned to this country and made her first appearance at the Metropolitan Opera House as Gertrude in "Gotterdammerung," a part in which she was praised by the critics. She was a member of the Metropolitan forces in 1914 and 1915.

First Appearance of the Sistine Chapel Soloists

Those who seek novelty in music had their taste satisfied on September 14, when the Vatican Chapel soloists, termed the Sistine, appeared at Carnegie Hall before an immense gathering which overflowed even the stage. You have heard of the boy soprano; perhaps you know something about the male soprano, too. But not many have listened to the latter, for America has not developed, as yet, female voices in our powerful sex.

If you do not look at Alessandro Gabbrieli, but merely listen to him, you surely will be puzzled by the sounds coming from a male's throat, for they are sounds of feministic quality, in fact the genuine soprano tone. Mr. Gabbrieli's voice is an excellent quality of the unusual soprano and his success was out of the ordinary.

Luigi Gentili is the possessor of a contralto timbre, but its range did not always come out with full force. His ability would be analyzed if we had the opportunity to hear him in a solo.

Augusto Dos Santos, a basso, possesses not only a superb organ for liturgical music but for more pretentious works; in fact he demonstrated himself superior to any of his colleagues.

Ezio Cecchini, tenor, did not disclose an exceptional voice. The program would appeal to worshipers and the representatives of their religious denomination.

Naturally the quartet held at all times the interest of the audience, while the compositions did not succeed in stirring one who is accustomed to listen to the great masters of music.

The quartet was assisted at the piano and at the organ by Signor Cametti. The secular compositions interpreted by the Sistine Quartet embraced the names of Jomelli, Vittoria, Jannaconi, Peresi, Cappocci, Palestrina, Antolisei, Lasso, Muller and Marchetti.

Out of curiosity one would attempt to satisfy himself, but I do not believe that a second hearing would strengthen our opinion and the impression already given.

The Metropolitan Raises Prices

Music registers a protest. Other necessities, as well as luxuries, have mounted to fabulous prices. Then has music also a right to demand an increase? The Metropolitan Opera House has decided to increase the $6 orchestra seats to $7, and the dress circle from $3 to $4. But early subscribers will not have to pay more than heretofore, and the balcony and the standees remain unchanged.

That the privileged classes will be made to pay higher prices thus might be somewhat disconcerting to them. It sounds like heavy taxation on wealth. We are glad that the genuine opera lovers will not be compelled to pay an increase. For this the management is to be congratulated.

Still, the privileged classes have also a right to protest; but isn't the increase due to the fabulous salaries paid to the foreign artists? Enrico Caruso receives an enormous fee not because of his greatness but because he is a box office attraction. Geraldine Farrar has been among the "passee" for some seasons, but still she receives an enormous salary because she draws. Other Metropolitan artists also are overpaid.

The privileged classes are not the real opera lovers. They come late to the opera house and stay only a while—long enough to attract the attention of their social rivals. Therefore the Metropolitan decision is not liable to raise any objections.

Who Is Rosa Ponselle's Teacher?

A reader of our journal makes this inquiry: "Who is Rosa Ponselle's teacher?" and this comes immediately after that pertinent question: "Who is Galli-Curci's teacher?" I asked the inquirer what prompted her to ask this question. She answered, "I saw another conspicuous advertisement in which the man who claims to have been Galli-Curci's tutor states that he has taught singing to Rosa Ponselle also."

As I wish to make my answer to all our readers, I will say that Alfredo Martino once gave vocal instructions to Rosa Ponselle, and at present she coaches with Mr. Romano, who is connected in some capacity with the Metropolitan Opera House.

THE STORY OF "MADAME CHRYSANTHEME"

"Madame Chrysantheme," a lyric comedy in four acts, by Andre Messager, was first produced in Paris on January 26, 1893. The book is by Hartman and Alexander and taken from the exquisite story of Pierre Loti. For the American premiere by the Chicago Opera Association Monsieur Messager has made several changes, to bring the opera up to date, as it will serve as another "Madame Butterfly" for the diminutive Japanese prima donna, Tamaki Miura.

It tells of Pierre, a midshipman, who finds in Japan the life he has dreamed of in far-off Brittany. It is the story of his wedding to Mme. Chrysantheme, a Geisha girl, who, though a woman at heart, seems but a child, charming and confiding.

There are many familiar Japanese scenes in the opera—the city square, with its merchants, its theaters, its temple and the people at prayer, the dancing girls, and the Geisha songs of flowers, youth and love.

Chrysantheme has felt the inevitableness of her parting from Pierre, and she takes her great sadness bravely, and no message could be more tender or better tell the story of the opera than the letter she sends to Pierre on his homeward journey.

"Forgive my audacity," she writes. "I want to keep a place in your memory. I dare not say in your heart, for it was never mine! I was but a doll, a plaything, in your life. If I saw you leave with a smile on my lips, I want you to know, when you are far, far away, that in Japan also there are women who love—and who weep."

Herman Rosse, head of the design department at the School of the Chicago Art Institute, will provide the new production of Messager's French opera, "Madame Chrysantheme." Mr. Rosse spent the year 1910 studying theaters in the orient, and his observation of the Japanese, Chinese and Javanese art has fitted him in an exceptional way for his work on this new production.

"A SHEPHERD'S EVENING PRAYER"

The following lines are part of a letter from Dr. H. J. Stewart, the official organist at San Diego, Calif.:

"Dear Mr. Nevin: Your charming little organ piece pleases me exceedingly, and it will figure on one of my programs next week. I hope you will feel encouraged to give us some more of the same quality.

"Sincerely yours,
"H. J. STEWART."

Harold Flammer, Inc., New York, publishes this number, which has been used by about thirty of America's leading organists and hundreds of less prominent ones. It is effective for recital and church.

Votichenko — Mr. and Mrs. Sascha Votichenko have just returned to New York from Baltimore, where they were entertained by Frederick and George Steiff. Votichenko, who is deeply interested in the technique of piano making, was invited to inspect their factory. He expressed sincere appreciation of the sustained vibrations which are a particular characteristic of the Steiff piano, a quality which Votichenko compared to the resonant after-tones of the tympanon, by means of which a pleasing effect of distance may be obtained.

YEATMAN GRIFFITH AT PLAY AND AT WORK

The first of the two pictures shows Yeatman Griffith and his family on their farm at Hartsdale, N. Y., where they spent the Summer in all sorts of bucolic employment.

In the other we see Mr. Griffith and his little daughter, Lenore, ready for a spin in their Cadillac, a form of relaxation of which they are both very fond.

But holiday time is over now, and Mr. Griffith is busy as ever in his New York studio, where there are under his care young artists and students from all parts of the world, building voices, perfecting repertoire and learning new roles.

Mr. Griffith has, probably, as many professionals in his class as were ever attached to any one studio anywhere, and these include established singers in the operatic, church, concert and oratorio worlds, as well as teachers from all parts of this country and many from Europe, where Mr. Griffith's fame and reputation are on a par with that in the United States.

KATE PENTZER STOKES

Kate Pentzer Stokes, after spending the month of July in the Rocky Mountains, returned to Chicago and resumed her teaching at the Chicago School of Expression and Dramatic Art in the Fine Arts Building, where she had, throughout August, a truly exceptional class.

This same happy condition has carried over to the fall term, and the prospects for the entire school year are glowing. Mrs. Stokes is an exceptional teacher, just as she is a remarkably talented reader, and her success is thoroughly well deserved.

Browne — Kathryn Browne, mezzo-soprano, has returned from abroad, where she has been giving concerts through the camps of the A. E. F. under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. and the Overseas Theater League, and will spend the winter in Chicago.

KATHERINE SCHUSTER TO TEACH IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS OF FOREST PARK

Katherine Schuster, a splendid teacher of voice and a most intelligent and attractive personality, has been elected to teach music in all the grades of the Forest Park public schools.

In commenting on this appointment the Forest Park Review says: "Miss Schuster's mission in life is music; she talks it, lives it and breathes it."

Welge—Gladys Welge, violinist, was soloist at a luncheon given by the Sorosis Woman's Club of Irving Park on Monday, September 21, at Odd Fellows' Temple. She played the following selections: "Adoration," by Borowski; "Zapateado," by Sarasate, and "Rondino," by Kreisler.

ALTA MILLER

Miss Alta Miller, mezzo-soprano, who is one of the best-known teachers at the excellent Northwestern University School of Music, Evanston, Ill., is a woman of the most profound intelligence and has had exceptional training in every line, but such is her devotion to teaching and to the development of her pupils that she has but rarely come into personal public notice, although she has a beautiful mezzo-soprano voice and a repertoire which insures distinct success whenever she makes one of her rather infrequent solo or recital appearances.

She is a genuine Evanston product, inasmuch as she went through all the grades of the public school and high school in that city and afterward took a graduating course at the Northwestern University.

During much of this time Miss Miller was a student at the Northwestern University School of Music and studied theory, piano, and voice.

Her teacher in voice was Karleton Hackett, and later she studied also with various teachers in Chicago, including George Hamlin and Jane Osborne Hannah.

In 1906 she went to Europe, where she remained a year, studying with George Fergusson in Berlin and with Oscar Seagle and Sbriglia.

Throughout her school and college courses Miss Miller specialized in languages and continued this study very faithfully in Europe, so that her equipment for the correct teaching of this branch of the singing art is thoroughly exceptional.

On her return from Europe, in 1907, she was elected to the faculty of the Northwestern University School of Music, Evanston, and has remained an efficient and popular member ever since.

Her professional pupils are to be found in responsible positions all over America, and her studios in Evanston are always thronged with talented and thoroughly interested students.

Miss Miller made a number of successful recital and concert appearances during the Summer, but has now returned to her studio and her class in Evanston.

Her booking of pupils is, as always, very heavy for the season, and the list includes, as always, many fine voices and successful young professional singers.

LUCIE LENOX STUDIOS

Miss Frances Coates, artist pupil of Mrs. Lenox, is giving "Musical Etchings — Old English, Dutch and Oriental," at the Western Springs Woman's Club this Friday afternoon. Last Friday Miss Coates gave an Old English and Oriental recital in Wilmette, and on Tuesday, September 23, a Dutch and French program at a reception and tea at the residence of Mrs. Page, at Fargo-and-the-Lake, in Evanston.

Great success was scored by Miss Margaret Carr, one of Mrs. Lenox's young sopranos, at the big "Follies," given recently at Grand Beach, Mich., as a benefit for the Off-the-Street Club of Chicago.

MAE GRAVES ATKINS

Mrs. Mae Graves Atkins has recently returned from a tour of three months with the Chicago Operatic Company, in which she sang in eleven different states, with great success. She has just resumed her teaching in her studio in Kimball Hall, with prospects of a large class for the coming year. Mrs. Atkins is soprano soloist at the First Congregational Church in Evanston, and will sing the Holiday Services at Temple Emanuel for Mrs. Holstman, who is in New York. Mrs. Atkins will appear with the Apollo Club during the winter.

HELEN DRUMMOND CLARK TO TEACH AT DANVILLE

Helen Drummond Clark, who teaches piano at her Chicago residence, 5101 Kimbark Avenue, and is an associate teacher of the Sherwood School of Music with classes at Watseka and Milford, Ill., has added to her activities two days' teaching each week at Danville, Ill., where she has taken over the class of Orwin Shaffer.

Miss Clark has taught before in Danville and her return is subject for congratulation.

The class of Mr. Shaffer was a large one and Miss Clark will continue to teach at his old location in the Adams Building.

ETHEL JONES

Ethel Jones, mezzo, has returned from a summer spent camping and motoring through the west.

Among her early fall engagements is a recital at St. Katherine's, an exclusive school for girls at Davenport, Iowa; and at Kemper Hall, Kenosha, Wis. She gave the opening program of the Park Ridge Club last week.

The date of her fall recital will be announced later.

As to Our Directory Columns

The name of every Musician in the United States—every Composer, every Manager, every Publisher, every Teacher, every School, and every Manufacturer of Music Instruments, should be in the Classified Directory Columns of THE MUSIC NEWS.

It is a fact today that Managers, Directors of Schools, Program Committees, Festival Directors, Lyceum Promoters—in fact, everybody who has to do with Musicians, has formed the habit, when the address of a Musician is wanted, of looking in our Directory Columns for it.

We have been told again and again,

"Your Directory Is the Most Useful List Published in the United States"

Even if you have no intention of doing more public work—even though you are located where no change seems possible—it is still advisable to have your name in our columns in order that your friends, the managers, the publishers and the public at large may have a ready means of finding your address.

And—if you ARE in the field for increased engagements or activities of any kind you will find no medium so useful as this.

We have Classifications for every Instrument, for the Voice, for Publishers, Manufacturers, Composers, Directors, Ensembles, Theory Teachers, Dancing, Dramatic Art, Clubs, Choir Boy Training, Pageantry, Community Singing Directors, Managers, Accompanists, Public School Music Teachers, and others.

If we have not your Classification we will create a Department for you.

The cost of this service is only fifteen dollars a year, but the service itself is invaluable.

During the last season we carried in the Classified Columns hundreds of names. We want to carry additional hundreds this season, and expect to make the list as near complete as we possibly can.

Payment for this service can be made Annually, Semi-Annually or Quarterly—and, as we send THE MUSIC NEWS to each one whose name is in these columns, you need have no further expense for subscription.

Display Advertising in MUSIC NEWS is considered today the most useful in America, and you will—eventually—be in the field for that. But, meantime, you should not delay one week in having your name in our Classified Directory Columns, for this is AN INVALUABLE SERVICE.

LOS ANGELES

Musical doings have been rather quiet, yet during the summer many events of interest have taken place of no small import as a connecting link to the stupendous things outlined for the coming season, which at this time promises more than any former season's program.

The Gamut Club's meetings, regular and special, showed the strong hold it has in the progressive steps necessary to the full fruition of musical endeavor. In July the star guest was Geraldine Farrar, who favored the assembly of gentlemen with an inspiring talk on art, drama and music. On urgent request, she sang a solo. Hon. Meredith P. Snyder, our new incumbent in the office of mayor, was introduced, and he gave an address of recognition of the good influences of the Gamut Club for the music and art uplift of the city. Charles R. Baker, advance manager of the San Carlo Opera Company, spoke for the presentation of opera in English, and received most hearty applause. This gives an advantage to the American student.

President Behymer outlined the work for the new Philharmonic Orchestra, and mentioned the support given it, with the great and essential backing in money, by W. A. Clark, Jr., who wants the very best that can be done in orchestral equipment. Lester Donahue, pianist, gave several fine solos. Leon Rice, tenor, with Mr. Garroway as accompanist, and Albert Wallenstein, cellist, also a home product of renown, also appeared.

The August program even surpassed in interest the former, being "Ladies' Night." It was a capacity attendance. Miss Carol McComas has just returned home from the front in Coblenz, where she gave, with three other artists, programs for the boys over there. The good cheer and spirit she radiates was most effective. Helen P. Read, soprano, with Mrs. Bush at the piano, were greatly enjoyed for their art and beauty. Miss Esther Rhoades, harpist, Dr. T. Percival Gerson of the Theater Arts Alliance, and Mrs. William Yorke Stevenson, who put on "The Light of Asia" at Krotona so efficiently, and Miss Neelye Dickson, who presented a play "Commuuity," at Hollywood, also appeared. All the speakers gave very interesting accounts of endeavors in the play, the work of local talent and home support.

Mrs. Dyer of Texas, a soprano, sang a group of pleasing songs, Miss Coe Martin accompanying. Leon Rice, tenor, with Mrs. Rice at the piano, sang a Jewell group, Opal, Amethyst and Sapphire, and Ware's "Mammy's," a negro dialect song, with fine delivery.

Miss Grace Wood Jess, in a group of Southern folk songs, in characteristics, tone, style and action, was entertaining, Mrs. Bush, at the piano, providing a fine support.

The Gamut Club, being always up to date, prepared a special reception to the bandmasters of the fleet while at anchor in our port. This was on August 11, and also a "Ladies' Night." In the absence of President Behymer, E. G. Judah, vice president, acted as toastmaster, and introduced his noted guests in a felicitous manner. The program was more than usually interesting and was prepared for the pleasure of the visiting strangers—the fleet leaders. The club's orator, Seward Simons, welcomed the visitors in a flowery word picture. Earl Meeker, a Gamut member, just home from the front, gave some of his experiences going through active service and returning. His subject was, "From the Army to the Navy," and was interesting throughout. Responses were rendered by Lieutenant-Commander Lytle of the flagship New Mexico and Bandmaster Totini of the same dreadnaught, also by Mr. Jones of the Arkansas and Song Leader Ross of San Diego.

A great surprise of the evening was the return of Charles A. Bowes, a popular singer and teacher of Los Angeles, and a charter member of the Gamut Club, who has been gone for eleven years and is now song leader on Admiral Rodman's flagship, the New Mexico, with special orders from Secretary Daniels to make possible the bringing of song into the life of the sailors and marines of the navy.

The welcome was overwhelming. The crowded banquet hall was left and all repaired to the Gamut Theater to enjoy a fine program donated by Los Angeles artist entertainers, Charles Farwell Edson acting as chairman in announcing the artists. Charles W. Cadman played selections from "Shanewis." Alfred Wallenstein, cellist, with Miss Adele Freebey, pianist and composer, essaying the piano part, appeared. A song cycle, "North, East, South and West," was sung by Mrs. Constance Balfour, soprano, the author, Miss Freebey, being at the piano. Carol McComas, singer and humorist, in story gave some excerpts used for the boys at the front. The Zoellner String Quartet played Tschaikowsky and Cadman selections. Hans S. Linne, with his Classic Dancers, gave a series of five classic impressions, which were highly artistic and spectacular, and thoroughly enjoyed, although near the midnight hour.

The September banquet was given up to a line of addresses rather than music. Mr. Judah, chairman, after a brief prelude to the club, called on Ben Field, who introduced the chief guest of the evening, namely, Mrs. Mary Roberts Rinehart, author and writer, who gave her experience as nurse and hospital worker in France. William May Garland, real estate enthusiast, spoke on "The Progress of Los Angeles in Landscape and Architectural Design." The music was a piano solo by Edith M. Kramer. Mrs. Molina Blincoe, reader, gave several Italian dialect selections, and John A. Van Pelt, baritone, a new arrival, sang in pleasing voice two songs, with Mrs. Van Pelt at the piano.

The musical interest most absorbing since the closing in June has been the orchestra and the programs to be given. The great question is: Can Los Angeles support two first-class organizations? It has been difficult to keep up one and give due consideration to players and conductors. The conclusion is that the L. A. Symphony and the Philharmonic will both be in the field. This would be impossible were it not for the encouraging financial backing given by W. A. Clark, Jr., who aspires to have a full complement of players of A-1 ability, without regard to the numerical population of Los Angeles.

The Philharmonic is to be first class in equipment, and quality and grade of music. Musicians of fame and musicianship will be engaged, who will devote their entire time to perfecting the works to be used in about fifty concerts. Walter H. Rothwell has been chosen as the conductor and L. E. Behymer as manager.

The program outlined is a gigantic one and will touch every line of musical appreciation that any city could desire.

Adolph Tandler, director of the Los Angeles Symphony, graciously tendered his resignation that perhaps, for the good of all, a merger could be effected, but other conditions were not favorably considered by the Philharmonic directors. The Symphony Orchestra would not accept the resignation, and both leaders are now in the East, securing program material and artists to make the season the best ever offered.

Mrs. Albert Sherman Hoyt of Pasadena is president of the Symphony, and favorable financial support is coming in, which promises a successful season. The spirit of superior excellence, as well as rivalry, may elicit patronage that will make both successful.

In the Philharmonic course, the twelve pairs of Symphony programs, artists, vocal and instrumental, of international fame will be presented. The ten popular lists will use the best local talent. Will open November 21 and 22.

It was much of a surprise to learn of a new orchestra being organized, after twenty-two years of struggle with the Symphony, and having attained no small reputation. The past year, with all its difficulties, gave its course with a higher degree of excellence and larger audiences than any former season. May they retain their old friends and patrons and make a good showing, musically and financially.

Christine Langenhan Recital

Mme. Christine Langenhan, Bohemian prima donna, gave a song recital of Russian songs by Tschaikowsky in her first group, French in the second, Bohemian in the third (Dvorak), and American in the fourth, representing Kramer, Mary Payson, Harold Webster and Charles W. Cadman. She demonstrated that she possessed a voice of great dramatic power, with good control, light and shade. She interpolated verbal explanations of her foreign text songs. Her best effort was Debussy's Aria from "L'Enfant Prodigue." Her presence was attractive and the splendid piano work of Claude Gotthelf was all that could be desired. Assisting was the Hope-Rosenfeld-Alter Trio, rendering Rachmaninoff's "Elegaic, Op. 9, in D Minor." The artists rendered it in the excellence of high artistry. The audience gave spontaneous expression of delight throughout the entire program.

Her audience was quite representative, but was greatly reduced by the street car strike and no return after 8 p. m., and were all automobile people and downtown lovers of music.

Mme. Langenhan has spent the summer here, resting and practicing for her recital season East and West. Her appearances at the Gamut Club and the reception given her by Mrs. Joseph Maw, and her recital

C. C. Draa presented his pupil, Miss Irene Mason, not yet sixteen, with marked talent, in a piano recital, playing the classics of Liszt, Chopin, Heller, Grieg and Schubert like a master of mature years. Liszt's arrangement of "Hark, Hark, the Lark" and Heller's "Tarantelle, Op. 85, No. 2," were well given, with assurance and fine technic. Her groups were preceded and interspersed by soprano songs given by Miss Hope Ford —a "Mignon" aria (Thomas), Rogers' "Star," and "Nymphs and Fauns," by Bemberg—well supported by Dorothy Strasburg at the piano.

Mme. Ragna Linne, famous soprano of Chicago, spent several months in Pasadena and Los Angeles, and did some special teaching in voice and coaching. Her studio receptions were well attended and were very interesting. Her recitals were most delightful, Miss Ethel Miller, a pupil, also appearing.

Mme. Cornelia Ryder-Passert, a former Chicago pianist, is presenting some delightful concerts with Mme. Petschnikoff, a Russian violinist, who has taken up her home here. Her daughter, Tajania, who was held in Germany during the war, has lately arrived from study since 1914.

Ben Scovell has been engaged to take charge of dramatic work in a prominent school here. He was a successful military entertainer during the war.

Miss Molly Byerly Wilson has spent the summer with us. She has been a favorite contralto and a successful concert singer for several years throughout the United States and Canada.

Charles Demorest has been elected Dean of the Southern California Guild of Organists.

Mrs. Lucy Seator-Bartlette, pianist, presented several programs of her pupils, showing talent and good preceptorship. Her husband, Dana Bartlette, cellist and painting artist, assisted in the program.

Fred G. Ellis, baritone and director, filling prominent positions and doing serviceable solo work of good order, has returned to Oklahoma, his former home, to larger fields of service.

Miss Olga Steeb, virtuoso pianist, was lately married to Charles Edward Huback, who is also a musician and was Dean of Redlands College of Fine Arts. She, also, was one of the faculty of the same school. They have gone to New York City and will concertize during the present season. She can prove her right to the platform as a superlatively great artist of the best piano music.

The Zoellner String Quartet closed their course of ten weekly recitals. The final was given to a capacity audience. The opportunity was a fine one for admirers of the most delightful of all small groups of instruments. We have the promise of another course, opening October 22, at the Comnock Hall.

A banquet was tendered to a group of some thirty-odd composers, teachers, directors, singers, critics and musicians at the Alexandria Blue Room by Theophilus Fitz, a teacher of voice and a tenor soloist. The object was to ascertain the possibility of an individual succeeding in vocal art by the measurement of the head and face, which is taken. He gave a very interesting lecture, illustrated by stereopticon views of heads of races, showing the normal head for each, voice compass and the normal possibility of the subject. The individual gives his own views in reply to a questionnaire of forty to fifty states or conditions, co-related, from which an opinion can be estimated on the individual's ability to attain. If his method can be proven to be true, much economy of time, effort and expense can be conserved for a nobler purpose in life than by the long try-out, to eventually be obliged to give it up as a failure. Yet there are illustrations of mediocre talent, with a genius for work, who have become great, and vice versa, but this may be covered in the questionnaire.

The subject was freely discussed on qualitative and quantitative character and the psychological and emotional endowment of the student as to hereditary and environmental conditions, and the age of development. It was an evening of pleasure and professional fellowship, and a subject of vital importance to the teacher and the student.

Great preparations are in the making for a big season. The orchestra and club events tally 135 concerts, which will average five a week. One hundred more unlisted, by teachers, churches and individuals will surely be a plenty. It is not a very inviting condition for the teaching force, but for musical appreciation the possibilities are unsurpassed, if the money holds out with patrons.

Vol. 11 Chicago, October 3, 1919 No. 40

STRAIGHT AHEAD!

In spite of unsettled conditions in the financial and the economic worlds — in spite of that still prevalent unrest which prevents the consummation of many beautiful plans — in spite of the feeling that the world at large is not yet back to that normality which will permit the careful thinking about art and educational interests, we must look straight ahead and plan for that fine future which, though it has been held back for several years and is still momentarily delayed, must certainly soon come to the Musical World!

"IF THERE IS A HARVEST AHEAD, EVEN A DISTANT ONE, IT IS POOR THRIFT TO BE STINGY OF YOUR SEED CORN."

Thus wrote Carlyle, and thus we must believe and act.

The Victories of Peace are yet to be celebrated in Music. The deep-seated emotions born of world travail will yet find this expression. The effervescence born of prosperity and content will still find its way to the surface through Song and Musical Story.

America lives and is glorious, and we, as Musicians, will have our great share in that prosperity and joy which are almost here after the prolonged days of suffering and waiting.

And not only must we be ready and prepared in every other way, but also in our equipment of ideals we must be as perfect as will be the day which is now dawning.

America first and greatest! That will be not only the natural outgrowth of the events of yesterday, but will be also merely the fulfillment of destiny.

And if first and greatest in other things, then—emphatically—in Music also.

There must be no letting down of ideal nor any surrender to weakling thought.

The Music of America was found to be good enough for all purposes during the war. Let us continue to assert that it is good enough for times of Victory and Peace!

We need not—nor should we, now that the stress is coming to an end—revert, in Music, to that serfdom wherein we admitted—tacitly in some cases, openly in others—that the music of Germany or any other country was better than ours.

We should go on unceasingly in the determination to give all our own Composers, Artists, and Artisans our first consideration. Whatever use we make of German music should be only by way of contrast to or model for our own. There should never again be permitted in this country slavish adherence to foreign ideals, but we should make our own, and glory in living up to them.

If German musicians in this country accept this standard and help us to keep it before the people, they should be welcome; but we want no propaganda for Germany through her music, nor any insistence upon the use of a language which has become distasteful to millions.

Neither will we accept the standards nor the ideals of any country other than Germany as ours, without reserve. We will study all music; we will cultivate a knowledge and a love for all that is good, but—

We will give our own FIRST PLACE, and in doing so we will shortly make it a beautiful privilege for foreigners to come to us rather than allow a continuance of any idea of patronage in the act.

And to all of this—and more—

AMEN AND AMEN.

Charles E. Watt

Editorial

PASSING COMMENT

If there is still a musician of German birth or lineage in Chicago who thinks that Music News glories in making it difficult for him to live in this country we have only one thing to say to him, and that is: Forget that Germany ever was the best known musical country, and that German composers are the most used and revered, and accept the World-Democratic dictum that we in America must (as we intend to do) use all the good music of all the World, and that we insist only upon the fact that Americans must have the first chance in their own country. And there can be no further question of animosity.

We are willing—nay, we are glad—to admit every good musician, of whatever birth (so long as he is a loyal American citizen), and will gladly accept all his work at value.

But we must not suspect—ever—that there is propaganda through the music of Germany, or that he is unwilling to accept the best in America as equal to the best anywhere; else we cannot put him on equality with Americans.

We have been challenged repeatedly as to our intentions regarding German music and German-born musicians, and our specific reply is this:

German-born musicians who are now loyal citizens here should receive every consideration that their talents and their efforts warrant.

The music of the older Germany should be used with entire impartiality, so long as it be not suspected of propaganda. But the day is past—irrevocably—when we will accept overwhelmingly German programs or German sentiment in this country, and even in our Symphony Orchestras we insist upon American compositions being freely used, and in our opera houses, too, the day is rapidly dawning when American works will receive much more consideration than now, and when Italian and French will be the exception instead of the rule.

New York managers often have expressed their contempt for Chicago in the breaking of contracts or the juggling with them in a way to suit their own conveniences and with no regard to what Chicago might consider its rights.

That is to say, some New York managers have done this.

But the day of reckoning is bound to come, and even now such a day looms in the offing for one manager who thinks it possible to play fast and loose with concert contracts in so far as they concern Chicago.

Many Music News readers will be pleased to read of the marriage of Collins Brock, which took place at Delaware, Ohio, on September 9, the co-contractor being Miss Ruthella Boggs, and will join with us in earnest good wishes for health and happiness.

Mr. and Mrs. Brock will live at Fellsmore, Florida.

Here is a telephone story which nightly delights hundreds at the Studebaker Theater, where "Take It from Me" is on view:

Two young business men in this play go to the office in the store to telephone a business message. One of them picks up the receiver and says, "Bluegrass 345." Then he drops limply to the floor, dropping the receiver as he murmurs, "My God! I got my number!"

It is possible that there are localities in America where this would not be appreciated, but in Chicago it is so apt that the audience each night fairly rocks with glee.

The night the editor saw the play there was applause at this point which continued for several minutes and was of such volume that it certainly should have been heard at the telephone offices in Washington street.

Here is a letter, copied from the Chicago Tribune, which has a whole lot more of truth than poetry in it and which can be read with profit by many people:

ALL PASSES; ART ENDURES

Chicago, September 22.

Editor of the Tribune: Please a word for the landlady. Art students coming to Chicago may not easily find what they want, for several reasons, and some are: They want things as cheap as in the country towns, and always "all home privileges," which includes a perfect disregard of the rights of other roomers, in deference to their art. The boys smoke in bed and ruin sheets and pillowslips and leave burning cigarettes on window-sills and ruin the decorating. Girls pursuing the "home privileges" care nothing about how they work the inferior landlady, all "as bohemians in Paris do."

If they are musical students their art inspires them to bang the piano at all unearthly hours, so tenants who can pay the price will not stay. If they are painters, they want to and do daub paint over everything, so a room has to be newly decorated when they leave. Students are not neat; they are destructive; they can't pay the price. They are told by schools how cheap they can live. One misguided, poor girl advertises for "a good private room, three good meals a day, unrestricted use of piano, private family, no other roomers, for $8 per week." It can't be done.

Let music and art teachers stop telling these country boys and girls they can live as cheap in Chicago as in a country village in a farming state like Iowa or Missouri. A LANDLADY.

Music News chronicles with regret the death of Mme. Trevisan, wife of Vittorio Trevisan of our own Opera Company, which occurred in Italy last week.

She was preparing at the time of her death to come to America with her two young daughters to join her husband.

Mr. Trevisan has the heartfelt sympathy of a wide circle of friends.

Do all you are paid to do and then some. It is the "then some" that gets you the raise in salary.

HENIOT LEVY

One of the most distinguished of Chicago's musicians, and a man whose fame as a pianist and composer has extended throughout America, is Heniot Levy, who is an associate director of the American Conservatory of Music, and whose piano class is one of the most distinguished ever built up in Chicago.

Mr. Levy—in his annual recitals, has proven himself one of the best equipped as well as one of the most musical of pianists, and his appearances all through the country have strengthened and amplified this reputation.

As a composer he is known for the solidity as well as the beauty of his work, and as a teacher his reputation has grown so great that he is unable to find teaching hours for the many young artists who desire to study with him.

A fine gentleman as well is Mr. Levy, and a distinct credit to the music profession of Chicago and America.

INTERNATIONAL LYCEUM AND CHAUTAUQUA CONVENTION

The International Lyceum and Chautauqua Seventeenth Annual Convention, which was held at Hotel La Salle September 14-19, was in certain respects in advance of all its predecessors. Addresses were made by many of the most celebrated educators and publicists in the country, the musical offerings were unusually high grade, the "stuntfest" numbers were the choicest the celebrities could produce, and a very large number of new members was added.

W. H. Stout of Indianapolis was elected president, Wallace Bruce Amsbary, Chicago, vice president; L. O. Runner, Chicago, secretary, and P. H. Kemerer, Carrolton, Ohio, treasurer. The "informal hour" designed to give young artists an opportunity to be heard by the convention and by the bureau, lyceum and Chautauqua managers, occurred daily at 4:30 p. m. It was under the direction of Henry B. Roney, whose sympathetic encouragement to the fifty young artists whom he placed on the program was pronounced the most constructive work of the convention.

These singers, pianists, violinists, cellists, cartoonists, magicians, whistlers, lecturers, readers, authors and concert companies came from California, Arizona, Oregon, North Dakota, Texas, Manitoba, Virginia, New York City, Boston, New England and states between. Some of these young people showed extraordinary talent and made immediate contracts with bureau managers for lyceum and Chautauqua work.

The convention next year will be held at Waterloo, Iowa, the Chamber of Commerce of that city having offered a bonus of $3,000 for the privilege of entertaining an association of such distinguished talent.

Chicago Woman's Musical Club—President's Day was honored on October 2 by a fine reception and musicale at Recital Hall, Fine Arts Building. CLARENCE EDDY IN ORGAN RECITAL

For the first time in several years Clarence Eddy is to give an organ recital in downtown Chicago.

The place will be Kimball Hall, the date Tuesday evening, October 14, and the following distinctive program will be presented:

Prelude and Fugue on B. A. C. H.
.....J. S. Bach

The authenticity of the above Prelude and Fugue has not been fullly established, but the present edition is due to Casper P. Koch, a prominent Pittsburgh organist. The Fugue is constructed upon the German initials B, A, C, H, our equivalent being B flat, A natural, C natural and B natural.

(a) "Romance Without Words"
(b) "Caprice Heroique"
.....Joseph Bonnet

Two charming new organ compositions by this distinguished French virtuoso.

"Night Song".....Herbert J. Wrightson

Suggested by Thomas Moore's poem, "At the Mid Hour of Night." Mr. Wrightson, the well known composer, teacher and critic, was born in England in 1869. He studied in Leipzig and settled in Chicago in 1897.

Sonata Cromatica.....Pietro A. Yon
1. Andante Rustico—Allegro Vigoroso
2. Adagio triste
3. Fantasia e Fuga

Peitro A. Yon was born in Settimo, Italy, in 1886, and graduated at the St. Cecelia Academy of Rome. In 1907 he was appointed organist and choirmaster of the Church of St. Francis Xavier, New York, which position he still holds. In a lengthy review of the above composition in the New York Musical America, A. Walter Kramer, the able critic, says: "A more interesting organ sonata would be difficult to imagine. It ranks with the very greatest organ works of our time."

(a) "The Holy Boy" (New)....John Ireland
(b) "March Solennelle" (First Suite)
.....Felix Borowski
(Dedicated to Clarence Eddy)

"The Holy Boy," by the English composer, John Ireland, is a carol of the Nativity and a rare musical gem of remarkable beauty. "The Marche Solennelle," by Felix Borowski, the eminent composer and musical critic, is the third movement from his First Suite for the organ.

(a) "Russian Boatmen's Song".....Anon
(Arranged by Clarence Eddy)
(b) "Basso Ostinato".....Antoine Arensky
(Arranged by Charles W. Pearce)

This Russian boatmen's song has long been famous as a folk song in Russia, and is sung by the boatmen on the River Volga. "Basso Ostinato" implies a short bass theme which is constantly repeated. The great Russian composer, Arensky, has treated this characteristic theme of five equal notes in each measure with wonderful melodic and harmonic skill.

"Paraphrase on a Theme by Gottschalk"
(New).....Karl Theodore Saul
(First time, and dedicated to Clarence Eddy)

Karl Theodore Saul, a remarkably gifted organist, pianist and composer of German birth, but now a resident of the United States, has selected Gottschalk's famous "Last Hope" for his theme, which he treats with consummate dignity and skill as "Introduction, Theme and Variations." One of these variations is notable as a canon upon the theme itself, and the last variation, played upon the full organ with double pedals, is unique in its harmonic development.

Toccata in F Major.....Thomas J. Crawford

One of the most brilliant concert pieces by the organist of St. Michael's Church, Chester Square, London, England. Mr. Crawford was a private pupil of Sir Frederick Bridge in London and Carl Reinecke in Leipzig.

JOHN LORING COOK'S PUPILS SELECTED FOR OPERA COMPANIES

Irene Sage, a pupil of Mr. Cook for the past seven years, has been engaged by the San Carlo Opera Company for a season of thirty-two weeks and left to join the troupe in New York City September 26. Miss Sage will sing principal parts.

Adeline Weaver, formerly from Ionia, Mich., was one of three sopranos selected to sing with the Chicago Grand Opera Company this season. She was especially complimented on the beautiful quality of her voice by Sig. Spadoni. She has studied with Mr. Cook for the past five years. Mr. Cook has been training singers and placing them in church concert and opera work for the past twenty-one years, and the results with those who have shown any aptitude for work and application have been most satisfactory. The bureau of which he is musical director has twenty companies on the road now and will add more this season.

MACLEAN COLLEGE

The Maclean College of Music and Dramatic and Speech Arts has recently moved to 2835 South Michigan Avenue, and is opening the fall term in its new quarters, which are most commodious. A visit recently paid to the new school by the chronicler was very gratifying. The Maclean College is a school worthy of great respect and attention, both on account of its appearance and the substantial quality of its work. The new house is school and dormitory combined and is well located as regards transportation and advantages of outlook. The rooms are in splendid condition and are large and light. In addition to these the house affords a miniature theater, thus making it possible for the students to live, learn and demonstrate results under the same roof.

The faculty is made up of men and women of unusual preparation and ability, so that the students of this school may be assured of excellent instruction, besides an abundance of personal association with, and interest from, the teachers.

ORCHESTRA HALL

Orchestra Hall, under the direction of Messrs. Wessels and Voegeli, will open its season Sunday, October 5, with a concert by the soloists of the Sistine Chapel of Rome. The members of the quartet are Allesandro Gabrielli, soprano; Luigi Gentili, contralto; Ezio Cecchini, tenor, and Augusto Dos Santos, basso. Albert Cammetti, the distinguished organist and choirmaster from Rome, accompanies the quartet as pianist and organist.

Artists and organizations to appear in recital and concert in Orchestra Hall this season under the Wessels and Voegeli direction include the Sistine Choir Quartet (October 5), Mischa Elman (October 19), Will Marion Cook and the American Syncopated Orchestra (October 28), Reinald Werrenrath (October 23), the Symphony Orchestra of the Royal Academy of St. Cecelia (November 11), Jascha Heifetz (November 30), Sophie Braslau (December 7), Benno Moiseivitsch, Alma Gluck, Efrem Zimbalist, Cleveland Symphony Orchestra, Albert Spalding, the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, Josef Hofmann, Edward Johnson, the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra, and Gabriella Besanzoni.

AT THE OLYMPIC

The writers of "Midnight" certainly are attendants at grand opera and must have witnessed "Tosca" many times, not to mention an occasional performance of "La Sonnambula," for their play contains the basic ideas of these two operas in its plot and is also somewhat indebted to that popular play, "The Thirteenth Chair," for some atmosphere at least.

Nevertheless, "Midnight" is a wonderfully telling play, and, while it is specifically mystery and melodrama, it yet—happily, lacks the "blood and thunder" element decidedly.

It is a play of quiet intensity rather, and no scene is made lurid.

Following this lead the actors are very much "repressed" both in speech and in action—too much so, in my opinion, in so far as the former is concerned.

It would be unkind for me to tell you the story, for it is the sort of a play that you should hear with absolutely no previous knowledge of the plot. And—rest assured, if you hear it in that way you will never be able to guess the denouement a single instant in advance of that telling moment in the final scene where it is given out with a suddenness and brilliancy which leaves you gasping.

In fact, there are plenty of thrills and gasps throughout the play, and if you like mystery as well as horror in a play, you may have all you want in "Midnight" and perhaps more.

It is said that a woman in the audience fainted during the torture scene (reminiscent of "Tosca") on Sunday night and on Monday, when the door of the safe was opened and the dead body of Jack Stewart rolled out, a woman just back of me uttered a piercing shriek that could have been heard to Madison street.

The cast is long and good. Pauline Lord is pretty, intelligent and effective in her chosen way. Unfortunately, she has chosen to imitate Mrs. Fiske, and, while she is successful in pose and action, the adoption of the Fiske mumble of words is most unfortunate in this particular play, inasmuch as the text is very necessary—every word of it.

Phalip Leigh as Paul is just as bad (and good), but the others of the cast enunciate fairly well, and throughout there is an excellence of preparation and of acting which is refreshing.

ALFREDO MARTINO

Mr. Alfredo Martino, the excellent teacher and an authority in voice, has prepared an interesting article which will appear in our issue of October 10.

Mr. Martino can boast of having one of the most attractive studios in the metropolis. He resumed teaching on September 29, and beginning October 1 he will be located in his new eight-room studio at 131 Riverside drive, New York.

Lippard—Mattylee Lippard, voice teacher in the studio of Mme. Sturkow-Ryder, will return to Chicago in October. Miss Lippard met with a severe accident on the New York Elevated last month, on her way to rehearsal for a forthcoming production of light opera. She has been convalescing at her home in Columbia, Mo., and her many friends in Chicago will be glad to hear that she expects to be entirely recovered within two more weeks.

HELEN HAWORTH TO SPEND SEASON IN CHICAGO

Helen Haworth, contralto, has returned from a summer spent at her home in the West, and will be heard often this coming season. Mrs. Haworth studied extensively before coming here, among her teachers being Maitland Davies and William Conrad Mills, soloist of the President's church in Washington. Coming to Chicago last season, Mrs. Haworth devoted much time to voice work with Sandor Radanovits, of whom she speaks in a splendid way.

HELEN HAWORTH

Mrs. Haworth appeared in one of the artist recitals at Fine Arts Building and won the enthusiastic approval of all by her glorious voice and charming personality. Her intelligent interpretations and unusual ability in depitcing moods, either grave or gay, would make her an interesting artist, but Mrs. Haworth has a voice unusual in its richness and power, and the coming season will be a delightful one to those who have the pleasure of hearing her.

Mrs. Haworth is not only gifted for such work as oratorio and concerts, but has made a definite success in costume recitals.

Babcock—Annabelle MacIntyre Babcock, the possessor of one of the finest contralto voices in Chicago, has given up her studios in the Fine Arts Building, this city, and gone to Denver, Colo., where she will enter the music profession and where some big church will be most fortunate in securing her services. Since her return from Lawrence Conservatory (Appleton) several years ago, Mrs. Babcock has been solo contralto at the New England Congregational Church in Chicago and has done such splendid work there as to thoroughly endear herself to the congregation. Her departure is much deplored.

LESTER-WORTHINGTON

Thursday evening of this week Margaret Lester, soprano, and Ruth Simmons Worthington, contralto, appeared as soloists with the Edison Symphony Orchestra.

CHARLES W. CLARK GIVES PROGRAM FOR STUDENTS

Thursday afternoon Charles W. Clark gave an interesting program at his studio for students in the interpretation classes. Mr. Clark gave an interesting talk about singing and made well directed points about the singing of songs. He presented in all twelve songs and displayed the broad interpretative art that has made him famous. Two of Homer's were delightful; "A Lone Dog" and "When Death to Either Shall Come." "Lord God of Abraham," (Elijah) was excellent. "Story of Old" was given with great sympathy.

"A Group of Negro Spirituals" were high lights in the afternoon's singing; exceptional mention should be made of "There's a Little Wheel Turnin' in My Heart," "Some of These Days," "Liza Jane," and "My Little Banjo."

LUCIE LENOX STUDIOS

Mrs. Lenox is just opening up her new Oak Park studios, a fine suite of rooms in the Caldwell building, 801 South boulevard. Miss Frances Coates, artist pupil of Mrs. Lenox, gave an entire program of Japanese songs at an elaborate Japanese function at Madison, Wis., last Tuesday, and on the following day a "Musical Etchings" program of Old English, Irish and French songs.

Miss Nell Sansom, a soprano from Texas, who was with Mrs. Lenox last year, has returned and resumed her study.

MINNIE C. HUBBARD

Mrs. Hubbard is a violinist of no little merit and is one of the musicians of Minnesota whose talents are constantly in demand. All the time she can possibly spare for teaching is demanded of her, and only the fact of being an indefatigable worker could ever enable her to teach in addition to her concert work. Mrs. Hubbard in her home city of Mankato has been the backbone of various musical interests, and as an impresario she has "put over" some of the best attractions Mankato has ever had. An active member of the Thursday Musical of Minneapolis and of the Minnesota State Music Teachers' Association, she has shown initiative and energy.

MINNIE C. HUBBARD

As a violinist she is ever on the alert for new works, and has played many American compositions.

A business woman herself, she is very much behind any movement that will knit business interests with the profession and believes they only have to meet to understand they have the great human interest in common. "Business men seem more afraid of acknowledging they have a love of music than the musician does that he has a business sense, but when you bring them together they find they are pretty well balanced after all."

Appended is one of Mrs. Hubbard's programs of the past season:

Sonata	Converse
Concerto	Mardini
La Folia	Corelli
Scene de Ballet	De Beriot
Le Trille du Diable	Tartini
Hullamzo Ballaton	Hubay
Romance	Ogarew

Romance	Wieniawski
Novelette	A. Foerster
Berceuse	Melville
Hungarian Love Song	Helen Ware
Au bord d'em Ruisseau	Boisdeffre
Le Captive	Beach
Vor Threna Bild	Hubay

Some numbers prepared for this season include:

Sonata	Melville
Sonata	Rubinstein
Sonata	Nardine
Sonata	Corelli
Romance	Elman
Tartare Melodie	Korsloff
Meditation	Wieniawski
Questions et Responses	Cui
Souvenir de Moscow	Wieniawski
Nocturne, Op. 27, No. 2	Wilhelmj-Chopin
Andante	Franz Ries
Minuet	Franz Ries
Romance	Rachmaninoff
Romance	Yost
Hungarian Poem	Hubay
Etude No. 13	Paganini
Romance in F	Beethoven

Mrs. Hubbard's pupils appear in various concerts, sometimes in ensemble with her, and she attracts unusual talents to her, for she has always a most interesting class. With her knowledge of so much of the best violin literature, she has been able at all times to present her pupils in programs that were fresh and interesting to the public as well as adapted to talents of pupils.

Mrs. Hubbard combines the social and business instincts in evenly balanced measure, and the ever-present link between them is her profession of music. This season she has engaged to play more concerts than usual, and is occupied now adding many new works to her already large repertoire.

JOSEPH BONNET

When Joseph Bonnet returned to Paris a few weeks ago he received a great ovation at his church, St. Eustache. Not only the clergy, but the parishioners and his many friends got about him and extended a greeting that he will never forget. Many of the people wept in their joy to have him once more in Paris. He resumed his duties at the church and remained there until after the Feast of the Assumption, August 15, when he took part in the festival service. Immediately afterward he left for his villa near Biarritz to spend the summer with his parents. Mr. Bonnet will return to America for his transcontinental tour the middle of November.

BRAILLE MUSIC CLUB

At the home of Mrs. Joseph G. Davis this writer was invited to attend a musical given for the Braille Music Club by Mrs. C. A. Whyland, Mrs. Osbourne and Miss Hirschberg, accompanist. It is needless to say that the evening was most enjoyable, but the program was not the most interesting part to the chronicler, who is accustomed to hearing many programs of the same description. The interesting feature was in finding out through Mrs. Davis the organization and purpose of the Braille Club, which is a club of blind musicians organized by Mrs. Davis last March. There are some thirty-five blind members in this organization, all of whom are skilled musicians, from whose numbers have been established a seven-piece orchestra, and a chorus of about twenty-five voices. The chorus is to be trained by Mrs. A. W. Cole and a study is to be made of the works of American composers, beginning with the first six songs by an American composer, i. e., Hopkinson.

Invitation has been extended to the Braille Club by different musicians' clubs to attend their recitals and the club is now Federated with the National Federation of Music Clubs. It is the ambition of every member of the Braille Club to own a Federation pin and they are sending a delegate to the coming Illinois Federation meeting at Alton.

The club meets every two weeks at the home of Mrs. Davis and once a month an entertainment is furnished by outside artists. The members of the Braille Club constitute one of the most appreciative of audiences and the work they are doing is to be commended in the highest degree. Credit is certainly due Mrs. Davis, who is in more than one sense the "patron saint" of this splendid organization.

JOSEPH DE VALDOR

Not long ago he was appointed American correspondent for Lo Spettacolo, the only theatrical and musical daily in the world. This paper is published in Rome. It is the intention of Mr. De Valdor to sail for Europe next spring, and on this occasion he will have an interview with the minister of Beauxarts in Paris with the purpose of effecting an exchange of American artists with French. France has sent us their professors for our universities, and likewise America has practically reciprocated.

CHICAGO OPERA ASSOCIATION

Not least among the many sensations planned for the coming opera season will be the new ballet pantomime by the Chicago composer, John Alden Carpenter. It will be called "The Birthday of the Infanta," and is based on Oscar Wilde's tale. The poetic story tells of a misshapen fantastic, Pedro, who dances happily at the birthday of the Infanta, amid plaudits, only to discover his own terrible grotesqueness. Adolph Bolm, famous both as a mime and art director, will appear as Pedro, but the ballet as a whole will offer many delightful opportunities for the groups of merry children who gather at the party. Robert Edmond Jones, considered by many as the American wizard of light and costume effects, will take charge of the scenery, costumes and properties, while Bolm, who first came to this country with the Diaghileff Ballet Russe, will stage the production.

CLEOFONTE CAMPANINI
General Director, Chicago Opera Association

Mr. Carpenter's music has more than once been written for exquisitively chosen poetry. His sound musicianship, his delicate refinement, his broad culture, his poetic insight and his wealth of lovely sound, have made him a master musician and composer, and a truly great representative of all that is best in American music and American traditions.

The first scene of "The Birthday of the Infanta" is laid in the garden of the royal palace of Spain. There is a terrace at the back of the stage, leading to which are two staircases, right and left. The occasion is the birthday of the royal Infanta.

The little Princess, dressed in a costume of the Velaska period, emerges from the palace alone. She is sad and depressed. She is convinced that her birthday has been forgotten. But she is interrupted by her old and ample nurse, who comes to prepare her for The Great Surprise. Almost at once the children, her birthday guests, begin to arrive—in twos, in fours, and finally in one gay and noisy flock. They run, they dance, they play. At the climax of their excitement a trumpet, a signal, is heard from behind the scene. Eager curiosity! Something is going to happen! A strange procession marches upon the stage. First come two enormous Major-Domos, with clothes and gesture, bizarre and alike. They are followed by a file of solemn servants, each bearing high a tray and on each tray is A Birthday Gift, covered with mysterious wrappings, but large and satisfying.

The spectacle begins. First there are gypsy dancers, followed by a juggler and a tight rope walker, a curious pair, the one tall and meager, the other short and much too fat for his delicate profession. Then follows a Bull Fight, the best kind of all, a make-believe one with boys on hobby horses and a wonderful bull in plush.

Then comes the Climax of the party. A weird and fabulous creature is brought in. He has been caught in the forest and appears grotesque and misshapen. He is the last offering at the feast. At first he is timid and shy. His dance is one of strangely shifting moods, of fear and confidence. But in the end he achieves a dance of wild and absorbing abandon. The children applaud wildly, and the Princess in her excitement throws her handkerchief to the fantastic. He is filled with extraordinary emotion. He wonders if it is a sign that she has found him beautiful. He wonders if, maybe, she loves him.

The cook now comes out, a great fat creature, with sixteen candles. There is great excitement among the children and they follow cook and birthday cake into the palace. Pedro, the fantastic, cannot bear to be left alone. He follows and is repulsed by the Major-Domos. It is growing dark, so he clambers up to the Palace Windows. The scene changes. But the music does not stop and in one minute and a half Pedro is seen coming through a window into one of the Palace Chambers. It is gloomy. He can barely see. Suddenly he sees something coming toward him. He stops. It stops. Pedro has never seen a reflection, but suddenly the terrifying consciousness comes over him that this monstrous grotesque image may be his own.. He holds up the handkerchief, and lo! it, too, appears before him. This is the last blow. He recalls with inner agony the effect he must have made on the Princess. He repeats his dance, only in perverted form, in the way he thinks it must have seemed to her, and he falls broken hearted and dies. The children are seen in the background passing the door as they play some game. Finally they come in, but they do not see the prostrate form. But the Princess enters and at once detects the huddled shape of Pedro lying in the shadow to one side. She steals up quietly to his side and kneels. She makes a mute appeal. Finally she touches the handkerchief in his hand, but finding no response, starts back in horror and slowly steals away.

BLANCHE BLOOD

Miss Blanche Blood needs no introduction to musicians. Her work for the past fifteen years speaks for itself. She is favorably known as a splendid violin, piano and harmony teacher, while her work in public as violin and viola soloist and piano accompanist has attracted attention through the states. As a director of orchestra and ensemble she stands unique, having had charge of the ensemble class of the Drake School of Music for ten years, and also acted as assistant director of the orchestra under the late Earl R. Drake. She still maintains her ensemble class, which gives both violin and piano pupils practice not equaled in any other branch. Her class meets once a week, and two hours are devoted to the practice. Several public appearances are given each year. This is indeed splendid practice for the pupil.

As a composer she is also favorably known, having written a violin concerto in B Minor for violin and orchestra, a string quartet in G Major, two Romances for violin and orchestra, besides many smaller compositions for violin and piano.

She bears the distinction of being the only lady viola soloist in the city, and owns a genuine Viola 'd Amour of the sixteenth century. As it is impossible to purchase suitable viola solos, Miss Blood has arranged upward of one hundred for her instrument.

And last, but not least, she has branched out as a poetess, having written over one hundred the past two years.

FAY FOSTER'S "THE AMERICANS COME!" AS POPULAR AS EVER

It seems now to be a firmly established fact that "The Americans Come!" did not die with the close of the war, or even lessen in popularity.

Many clubs have announced their intention of using it the coming season.

The U. S. Navy Glee Club sang it all last year, and will do the same for 1919-1920, at all their appearances on the Keith Circuit. Mr. Jerry Swinford says: "It remains one of the most popular numbers. Why not give the people what they want?"

Mr. Walter Mills, one of New York's very popular baritones, is soon to start on a tour with Pryor's Band and at the especial request of Mr. Pryor will sing "The Americans Come!"

"I was delighted when Mr. Pryor asked me to use this song," said Mr. Mills, "for I always have immense success with it, and should feel almost lonesome not to sing it at my every appearance."

Hollis Dann, principal of the Department of Music at Cornell University, included it on his last program, saying: "It did not exactly 'fit in' with the general scope of the program, but I love it so, and so do the audiences, that I just couldn't leave it off."

SOMETHING ABOUT CHAMBER MUSIC AND SOME OF ITS DEVOTEES

In the pleasant realm of music no art form yields more intimate and lasting satisfaction than Chamber Music. There was a period in development when it was looked at dubiously and, from a distance, as the food alone of the "high brow," whatever that may be. Those were the days when organizations like the Kneisels had small audiences. But you can't keep a good thing down any more than you can a good man. They came along faithfully and regularly. People tasted the music and found it very nice. Followers increased. So did competition, until at present the String Quartet is dangerously near becoming a popular attraction. The traveling companies are more numerous but the best thing of all is the way recognition has come to the local men. A lot of quartets which have for years been playing together out of pure love for the music have gained prominence and place. They are now essential factors of the current musical life of every large city.

In Chicago it was long a custom to use the four string principals of the Symphony Orchestra as a quartet. The inevitable changes of each season worked against any permanent co-operation. The vital thing about chamber music is practice, and then more practice, until the individuals entirely surrender their personalities and become absorbed in the music itself. In this way alone is intimacy established.

Among the quiet workers in the field for the last seven years is the body headed by George Dasch and known as the Philharmonic String Quartet. The other players are Fritz Itte, Otto Roehrborn and Carl Brueckner. Each man is a prominent member of the Chicago Orchestra, which training of itself gives a certain qualification for ensemble playing. Their long association has familiarized them with the best of the large volume of literature for the string quartet, a fascinating sphere because of the touches of personal interest. Much of this music is a personal tribute of the composer to a group of men whose playing ministered to his artistic satisfaction. The Philharmonics sense this attitude and their playing ever carries enjoyable interpretation of the mood and manner of the music they present. They have acquired a repertoire and an ensemble such as only their own intimacy and the years of work together can bring about. Naturally they have at command the standard music which scares off people, sometimes, by being called Classic. But their list includes also the work of newer men and keeps always in mind the unfailing value of what is simple and direct in its musical appeal.

Of the men individually, George Dasch has made for himself an enviable reputation by his likable personal qualities, his enthusiastic ideals and his untiring industry. He has been sought as an associate in many quartets, appearing in concerts with such artists as Hugo Heerman, Bruno Steindel, Frederick Stock, Ludwig Becker, Madame Bloomfield-Zeisler and others of prominence. He was the viola player in the Kortschak Quartet when Mrs. Coolidge exported it to her home in Pittsfield and christened it "The Berkshire," but he declined to leave Chicago. His successful direction of the Art Institute Sunday concerts is notable. The Philharmonic String Quartet is the realization of the high ideals which have led him from the beginning of his musical career, and these are shared by his veteran comrade, Carl Brueckner, the rarely choice cellist of the Philharmonics. His art is exquisitely finished. He is regarded with a real affection by the regular patrons of the Orchestra and his solo appearances are made the occasion of a demonstration. These extend back into the days of Theodore Thomas. The fact that Mr. Brueckner was always chosen by Franz Kneisel to assist in the Chicago concerts, when an extra cellist was required, carries compliment as well as authority.

Fritz Itte, who holds the second violin chair, although unusually gifted as a soloist, has also had extensive experience in chamber music. For several seasons he was a member of the famous "Steindel Trio." His solo appearances with the Symphony Orchestra and at the Art Institute Sunday concerts have won for him a wide circle of friends and admirers.

Otto Roehrborn, the viola, is another veteran in chamber music. A member of the celebrated "Spiering Quartet" for many years and later as head of the second violin section of the orchestra; always one of the Chicago String Quartet. It would be difficult to find a better schooled musician and an artist more fitted for the place he occupies so splendidly in the Philharmonics. He adds to his other qualifications the technic of a good piano player and supplies such accompaniments as are needed to give varied and interesting programs without outside assistance.

The organ was transformed from a small instrument of ordinary interest to an instrument of wonderful variety and practically unlimited possibility in the matter of tone and shade at the skillful hands of Mr. Seder, who, albeit, had never touched the instrument before Sunday evening. His playing was technically exquisite, and his use of the resources at his command a mark of artistry.

No less an artist was Mr. Smith in the direction of the chorus, which did remarkably good, substantial work. The most successful number on the program was the Gadsby "O Lord, Our Governor," which was done with great decision and spirit.

An interesting number for solo voice and choir was "I Will Lift Up Mine Eyes" (David Stanley Smith). This was done with thought and accuracy and made an excellent impression. The entire program bespoke a fine spirit of co-operation between director and chorus, and demonstrated the results of consistent work well directed.

STORY OF "LOVE OF THREE ORANGES," A FAIRY TALE TO BE FEATURED BY THE CHICAGO OPERA.

Answering curiosity in regard to Serge Prokofieff's new opera, "L'Amour des Trois Oranges" ("The Love of Three Oranges") which will be given a world premiere early in the season, the Chicago Opera Association has issued a summary of its fantastic story. Prokofieff is a revolutionary Russian composer and has been called "futurist," "barbarian" and "enfant terrible" by many startled critics.

His opera is in four acts and ten scenes and has a prologue. In brief, it is a fantastic and picturesque portrayal of an imaginary fairy tale that is enacted in an imaginary kingdom, with the aid of the magician Tchelio, protector of the king, and Fata Morganna, sorceress and protector of Leandre, the minister of state. Leandre aspires to the throne, with the connivance of Clarice, the king's niece, and is therefore seeking the overthrow of the hypochondriac prince.

In the prologue, a herald enters and proclaims that "The King of Clubs is in despair. His son and beloved child is suffering from an incurable hypochondria."

At the opening of the first act the king is surrounded by an army of doctors armed with all manner of instruments. He asks them to explain just what is the matter with his son, and they reply that he has every conceivable illness—headaches, indigestion, nervous troubles, neuralgia, insomnia, enfeebled eyesight. They declare that only laughter can cure his son. The story that follows deals with the efforts of Trouffaldino, the court clown, to make the prince laugh by means of weird dancing, grotesque pageants and entertainments; with a mysterious cabalistic game of cards played below ground, where Fata Morganna and the magician, Tchelio, deal the cards of fate and the sorceress wins the right to dispose of the prince; with the secret plottings of Leandre and Clarice; with Fata Morganna's interference with the success of Trouffaldino's efforts to make the prince laugh; with her bewitching of the prince, whom she sends in search of "The Three Oranges"; his travels with Trouffaldino through lonely desert regions; their encounter with the giant cook, guardian of "The Three Oranges" at Creonte's palace; their escape; their desperate thirst as they return through the desert; the mystery of "The Three Oranges"; the last-minute efforts of Fata Morganna to foil all by turning the newly found Princess Minetta into a rat; the fury of Tchelio at this miserable trick; the anger of the king; a last effort on the part of Fata Morganna; and then the final triumph of the prince—in brief, a fairy tale like which there is none other in grand opera.

Prokofieff's compositions have covered a large variety of musical forms. In Russia he has been looked upon as the peer of Stravinsky and as one of the leaders of Russian musical thought in its latest creative phases. A triumphant virtuoso and a composer and performer of piano concertos and ambitious sonatas, he is certainly one of the most remarkable figures in contemporary Russian music.

Associated with him are two noted Russian artists, Boris Anisfeld, who will provide the scenery and costumes, and Adolf Bolm, who will superintend the stage management. Anisfeld's recent exhibition at the Art Institute is well remembered. He is a master painter of all that is weird and fantastic, and his work for the Diaghileff Russian Ballet proved to be wonderfully beautiful. Bolm is also a great artist. All three Russians have been collaborating night and day for several months, and it is believed by the Chicago Opera Association that the new opera will prove musically and scenically one of the greatest sensations of the year.

THE DANGERS IN VOICE CULTURE

By Lazar Samoiloff

We all hear remarks made by very charming parents that they would send their sons or daughters to take singing lessons, but they are afraid that their natural voices will be spoiled by being placed or misplaced by the teacher. It reminds me of a story I heard when I was singing on the stage. A tenor of German descent sang with an Italian opera company the part of Faust, and the Marguerite was an Italian girl. She could not stand the throaty tones produced by the singer, so between the acts she remarked to him that it would be better if he sang "avanti" (that means placing the tone forward), showing him that the tone should be sent to the front of the face. He became angry and answered, "I have studied in Germany, France, Italy and all over. Each teacher placed my voice in a different spot. I will not move my voice any more; I am tired of moving it." Poor soul! he moved it all over, but never got it in the right spot. It happens with many singers. They move the voice here and there, but never get it in the right place. Voice placement is a very necessary study, but, like a razor in the hands of fools or children, it is dangerous. The nearer to nature your voice is placed the more beautiful it is. The first thing that a teacher must consider is the necessity of retaining the beauty the natural voice possesses.

For example, when Nina Tarasova, the young Russian singer of folk songs, came to me she never had had voice culture lessons in her life. Her voice had a natural, gorgeous quality, and all I had to work with her for was to show her a way to sing twenty-five or thirty songs without getting tired and still keep that natural beauty of voice. Now she can sing all evening without any fatigue.

The trouble in voice placement is that the teacher is asked by the pupils what method he uses. The teacher wanting to get the pupil's attention must call a famous name, "Lamperti, Marchesi, etc.," or "I was a pupil of a nephew's nephew of a friend of a pupil of Marchesi." Oh! then you will be my daughter's teacher.

Now about the method: If a teacher uses instead of his intelligence a METHOD he makes all the voices sound alike, monotonous, and with no soul. If the teacher uses his brains and understanding—hearing so as to judge which tone will appeal and at the same time will not hurt the throat, thus will be prove himself the right teacher.

In writing about Nina Tarasova critics, in their excitement over the wonderful expression she puts into her songs, her beautiful and appealing quality of voice, try to tell of her method. If Nina Tarasova would use a method in her singing and would not change the ways of tone giving, how would she be able to express twenty-five different songs of different peasants and keep the tremendous audience in Carnegie Hall applauding so vigorously that after the lights are put out they must be switched on again so that she can sing another song to try to pacify the crowd?

Individuality and temperament can be expressed only if the possessor of the voice is not bound by a method and sings freely.

Clarice Balas

Pianist

Town Topics:

"Her playing of the Hiller Concerto was masterly."

Cleveland Plain Dealer:

"Miss Clarice Balas, pianist, in the Hiller F sharp minor Concerto, scored a notable triumph. She has a virile, clean technic, infectious rhythm, a tone powerful and singing in chords and octaves as well as in her resonant melody. Moreover, her interpretation, while musical, is manly in strength. Her vibrant bass and robust octaves rang out even when the orchestra blared forth its loudest. Withal, as in the andante expressivo, Miss Balas plays with healthful sweetness of feeling.

"It is indeed rare to find a pianist of Miss Balas' exuberant vitality. As she sat there at the piano one somehow felt that a Brunnhilde had laid aside her mail and come to make us noble music."

Cleveland Press:

"Clarice Balas, talented pianiste, gave to the Liszt Hungarian Fantasie a brilliant exposition. The young pianiste again displayed brilliant technic and fine musical temperament."

Pittsburgh Dispatch:

"Miss Balas played piano numbers by Bach, Beethoven, Chopin, Liszt, and Leschetizky, pleasing well her audience of musicians."

Cleveland Topics:

"Miss Balas' superlative technic was never more in evidence than in her brilliant performance of the MacDowell Concerto. The last movement is of compelling rhythm. Miss Balas plays it with the ease and freedom with which she attacks any composition of whatsoever intricacy, and her fleetness of finger made its runs and arpeggios sparkle with tonal beauty.

Cleveland Leader:

"Clarice Balas is not only a pupil of Leschetizky, but is his disciple. Piano technic and interpretation of piano pieces begin and end with the great master. This Miss Balas professed and proclaimed throughout her program, which she played in such a manner as to do great justice and homage to her teacher. Her tone is warm and full, persuasive on occasion, and resonant when necessity demands it. Her technical abilities are many and sufficient."

The Elderly Person

It was all a new experience to the Elderly Person. In his boyhood and early maturity he had known river bluffs and headlands. A longer time in the prairies had in a way obliterated the early memories. Overnight he found himself dropped among the mountains. They are spoken of as the Berkshire Hills, and they are the border line of western Massachusetts. From the peaks about Williamstown, clear up in the northwest corner, can be seen the brooding mountain which watches over the MacDowell Colony at Petersburg, N. H. Northward are the Green Mountains of Vermont, and westward the Tachonic range in New York.

The Elderly Person in a day had loved these eternal fastnesses from the distance. They folded lovingly into one another in purpling shadows and brought benediction because of their mighty serenity. They looked patiently at the impatience at their feet. They sent smiles of hope and courage from their enduring strength. They spoke gently because of their ages old knowledge. They sang of their enveloping mystery. They tokened their majesty and dignity in upreared brows, and they uttered an eternal faith by the far-reaching vision which was theirs. The mountains point always to the future.

But while the Elderly Person felt big thoughts surge in longing for expression as he watched the mountains and felt their pervading serenity he longed for the intimate touch of close contact. This early morning he had stolen down the stairs, which would snap just a trifle, and after rifling the ice box, sat on the doorstep to put on his shoes, preliminary to his first walk in a real mountain. He was going alone, too, being quite full of instructions from his apprehensive host, who couldn't quite understand why it was preferred to walk instead of later going comfortably in the machine. It's mysterious but true that tingling sensations and keenest delight out of doors go with perspiration rather than petrol.

Along the wide old street went the line of march, bordered on each side with two rows of the English elms, whose long branches swept often to the ground and asserted their more than a hundred years of life since the retired sea captain founded the college which gave the village its name. Up the long slope this stately road leads past chapel and dormitory and library and halls, past the luxurious "frat houses" where living is made easy for learners. The Elderly Person found himself wondering how the spirit of the frugal Ephriam regarded these visible signs of reaction from the austerites of the earlier days. With no hint of criticism in the reflection, however. The beauty of an early jaunt is that your mind is clear. That is, if you are inclined to think, there are interest and suggestion at every step.

Beyond the second eminence the town stopped abruptly after the steps linger a bit in a belated cemetery where quaint inscriptions are on old headstones. Wives pledged eternal loyalty to a spouse's memory in those days and sealed the carved vow with weeping willows.

Just across the tumbling stream the ferns began their ingratiating invasions of territory and a naturalist's delight. In the Dunes the ferns are plentiful, but the Elderly Person had no first-hand acquaintanace with such profusion as beckoned him on every side and waved luring arms into depths which the eye could not penetrate. Great sweeping fellows there were, waist high and more, along with those of humbler stature crowding and contending for attention. Almost at once were noticed clumps of a vivid green fern, the fronds running to a sharp point and with heads all bent in one direction as if, when the wind swept over them, a certain yielding of stem made them unable to return to the old position. The Elderly Person gradually became conscious, too, of a delicate scent, so faint and fleeting that it was an aroma rather than odor or spicy smell. It was not pungent, but ever present. He thought it the early freshness of the day and the profusion of vegetable life held down by the heavy shadows through which he walked while the clouds baffled the sun's rays.

The road soon became little more than a trail, and no cross lines confused or tempted footsteps astray. For the most part a thick growth lined its sides, the tree tops interlaced above, while the thicket of wild growth crowded and edged and twisted for a right to live and come to something. To a prairie man this adorable tangle of fern and brier and bush, blossoming shrub, evergreen and flowers, playing hide and seek between moss and mulch, fairly radiated charm. Once in so often he had to stop and salute a stately maple, a multiplying linden, to crush the fragrant hemlock branches and to fairly hug the gleaming white birches which in some way seemed to demand a right of way to allow their "glossary of most lustrous leaves" to reach toward the sunlight. There was something happy about them. In family groups they grow and beam and shine. Their smooth bodies are not skeletons, but more like phantoms, luring and disappearing and dodging humorously from the eye which seeks to locate them and pin them to time and place.

An opening brought the Elderly Person to an opulent field of daisies and buttercups. He had scraped acquaintance with them all the way from Ohio and made a vow to roll in the first sward he could. Promptly he waded into the lushness born of June and, despite the moisture, laid him down and rolled in the riotous bloom. There was such profusion that to roll in it was about the only way to be able to assimilate its luxury. The daisies were wide eyed in their amazement, and fell over against one another as the foreign substance tried to get hold of the dream which had pursued him so long before realization. You need to have lived—well, never mind how long—before seeing a real daisy field in order to understand just how much fun and pleasure can enter into such a new friendship. The buttercups are beautiful—so brilliantly yellow, with so many blossoms on the tall stalks. If these sort grow in the West they have so far kept out of sight of a close observer. The sheep laurel came later on, and before the walk was over a pink lady's slipper held up its lovely cup for admiration.

At Christmas time the Elderly Person found a pedometer in his stocking with the skeptical intimation that the instrument would enable its wearer to verify some of his tales of miles in future. This alleged truth teller was properly attached to the belt at the beginning of the trip. The sun finally won out against the mists and sent long shafts of light filtering through the thickets, touching the dancing leaves, the white bolles of the birches and piercing the deep shades of brake and mossy banks. The walk had lasted quite a while, and there was no particular consciousness of ascent, so dense for the most part was the foliage. By all counts the watch said that six or more miles had been covered. But prudence said perhaps the regular gait was not maintained in mountain climbing. This recalled the pedometer, which had industriously clicked itself along the route. Consulting it for a tally, it recorded a blank—no mileage whatever!

While indignantly repudiating such a record, as he strode along, the Elderly Person came upon a stone on which was cut "Mass." on one side and "N. Y." on the other. Looking forward, he saw the wind-swept crest of the mountain and knew he was at the end of his road. Soon the Petersburg valley was spread before him luxuriously with the Tachonic range, enveloped in misty loveliness, in the far distance. By these tokens he was seven miles from home despite the pedometer. And with time to the good, too, as he turned his face toward breakfast, being full of everything else. So the pace trailed slowly through the leafy aisles, and stopped often to catch glimpses of the near-by hills, with tree tops standing, row on row, in musical symmetry and color. The eye was enraptured, the mind at rest, and the heart full of the loveliness. There seemed no wanting touch. A spoken word would have undone the spell.

A sward of the delicate green fern made its primeval invitation. With an apology for bruising and crushing such beauty, the Elderly Person stretched full length upon it, assuring each frond that it ministered royally to a sensitive soul. At once the delicate aroma which had followed all the way was marked. Plucking a spray, it was discovered that underneath each frond was distilled a sweet essence which clung to each fiber of the plant. It was the sweet fern, something known about, but never met before. Every sense was satisfied as the whole being basked in the new delight.

There wasn't even a fly or insect to intrude. The wonderful silence, the thick curtains of foliage, the ravishing luxuriance sank into the consciousness and filled every nerve with quivers of pleasure. Time and space and sense were lulled in a rapture that was almost exhausting.

. . . . . .

Suddenly into the solemn stillness a bird note of ecstatic sweetness was launched. Clear and cool, with mellow undulations, it reeled off its carol.

The cup of joy was overfull, for the Hermit Thrush was singing matins!

THE ELDERLY PERSON.

A PRIZE FOR AMERICAN COMPOSITION

Hugo Riesenfeld, the director of the Rivoli and Rialto Theaters, in his desire to encourage American composers, has offered a prize of $500 for the best overture submitted to him before March 31, 1920. The competition will be open to any composer residing in this country. The only condition is that the work must be not of too difficult a nature to prevent its being played with a limited number of rehearsals by either the Rivoli or Rialto Orchestras, which consist of fifty men. Mr. Riesenfeld has appointed as judges of the contest Kurt Schindler, director of the Schola Cantorum; W. H. Humiston, assistant director of the Philahrmonic Society; Josiah Zuro, the well-known grand opera conductor and director of the New School of Opera; Edward Falck, formerly assistant conductor at the Metropolitan Opera House and now director of music at the Aeolian Company; Otto Langey of the orchestral department of G. Schirmer & Co., and Erno Rapee, conductor of the Rivoli Orchestra. Arrangements have been made with G. Schirmer & Co. to print the prize winning composition, and all royalties will revert to the composer. Scores may be addressed to Edward Falck, in care of the Rialto Theater, New York.

WALTER WILD

Mr. Walter Wild, F. R. C. O., L. Mus: T. C. L., who went to Pittsburgh in 1917 to fill the position of Organist and Director at the Shadyside Presbyterian Church, is one of the young musicians Pittsburgh is proud and happy to possess. After one year's work, Mr. Wild was engaged as Director of the Music Department of the Pennsylvania College for Women and has been given credit for rejuvenating the department through his splendid work. After two years' successful work at Shadyside Church Mr. Wild has been called to the First Presbyterian Church of Wilkinsburg as Organist and Choir Director. Mr. Wild's experience in Scotland and England showed to great advantage at the performance of the "Messiah" given by the Mozart Club of Pittsburgh this past season. With wonderful ease, poise, and mastery, Mr. Wild accompanied chorus and soloists through this vast work and never has these accompaniments been heard to greater advantage.

Prokofieff—Serge Prokofieff, the young Russian, whose triple distinctions of pianist, composer and conductor have revealed him as an artist of great versatility as well as of remarkable gifts, will give his first recital of the season at Aeolian Hall, New York, on Sunday afternoon, October 12. This concert will be most interesting, as it will introduce Mr. Prokofieff as a player of Bach and Beethoven, as well as of his own compositions and those of his Russian confreres. Both the Philadelphia and Boston Symphony Orchestras will introduce Mr. Prokofieff's Scythian Suite on their programs this season.

HENIOT LEVY

Press Notices of Chicago Piano Recital, Sunday Afternoon, April 13, 1919, Kimball Hall

Heniot Levy, one of our most eminent pianists and pedagogues, gave his annual piano recital at Kimball Hall yesterday afternoon before an audience which completely filled the seating capacity of this concert hall.

His program, as is usual at the recitals given by him, was one which offered exceptional opportunity for the forming of a better acquaintance with the bigger works written for this instrument, and such compositions as the Beethoven Sonata, Op. 109; the Chaconne by Bach, for violin, arranged by Busoni; the entire set of eight pieces contained in the Fantasies, Op. 12, by Schumann, all brought for closer study the musical and poetic content of these pieces as presented with the masterful equipment of Mr. Levy's art and both as to mechanical performance and for musical reading they were played by him with artistic comprehension. — Maurice Rosenfeld, Daily News.

Heniot Levy gave an excellent reading of the Schumann fantasies at his recital yesterday afternoon at Kimball Hall. His playing was poetic and he was in the spirit of the illusive mode of expression characteristic of Schumann. Mr. Levy played a group of his own compositions, as yet in manuscript. To judge by the reception accorded them by the audience, they will not remain long in manuscript form. Mr. Levy, while abreast of the times in his attitude toward music, is not one of the radicals who wish to break altogether with the old. Music evidently to him is still the art of grace and charm to be expressed through melody recognizable as such and to be set off by rich harmonies which please. As in his composing, so it is in his playing. He seeks to make of the piano an instrument of beauty which shall sing the melody and enrich the background with mellow colors.—Karleton Hackett, Chicago Evening Post.

Heniot Levy's annual piano recital attracted a large and very warm audience. He offered a characteristic scholarly menu, beginning with Beethoven, closing with Chopin, with a good measure of Schumann in between. Mr. Levy, in spite of his arduous pedagogic program, played with the seriousness and care that we have come to expect from him, and the Schumann seemed to bring out in him a contemplative mood that was both restful and refreshing.—Henriette Weber, Herald-Examiner.

At Kimball Hall I heard the talented pedagogue-pianist, Mr. Heniot Levy, in a Beethoven Sonata and the Bach-Busoni Chaconne. The latter was very well played. Mr. Levy was recalled many times after the Chaconne. There was a good audience of Mr. Levy's important circle of admirers and friends.—Herman Devries, Chicago American.

Heniot Levy, a studious, learned and talented Chicago pianist, gave his annual recital at Kimball Hall yesterday afternoon. His program was of the most orthodox, containing Beethoven, Bach, Schumann, Chopin and some works of his own. One doubts at times the advisability of playing Schumann, but Levy played the Fantasia, Op. 12, with much enthusiasm, and the audience approved of it so heartily that he returned to repeat one of the sections. His own pieces, a Nocturne and two Waltzes, showed considerable original imagination and were played with a high degree of brilliancy.—Edward Moore, Chicago Journal.

MINNEAPOLIS SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The Orchestral Association of Minneapolis announces the seventeenth season of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra. The first concert will occur on the afternoon of Sunday, October 19, the opening concert of the Symphony Series the evening of Friday, October 24, to be followed by the usual number of Symphony and Popular concerts.

The success of the orchestra both at home and while on tour throughout the country has confirmed its value as probably the most notable civic asset Minneapolis possesses.

EMIL OBERHOFFER

This is the reason it can claim and receive the financial backing necessary for its future existence, and is a good reason why many who have never had the privilege of contributing to the guarantee fund should welcome the opportunity annually afforded of doing "their bit" by liberal purchases of season tickets to both the Symphony and Popular Series of concerts.

The orchestra has been increased to eighty-five musicians, and while many new faces will be noted, the principals of the various sections, with two exceptions, will remain the same as last season. Mr. Oberhoffer approaches his task with increased inspiration and enthusiasm after his musical pilgrimage East last winter, when he heard our most important American orchestras in their home surroundings.

A readjustment of the management returns Carlo Fischer to the position of assistant manager, replacing Edmund A. Stein, who will represent the orchestra's interests in St. Paul.

THE AMERICAN SYNCOPATED ORCHESTRA

Soothing savage breasts is not the only mission of music. There is a latent love of rhythm in every breast waiting to be stirred by this most godlike of the arts. You may perchance belong to the negligible group who nod in church, lulled into unconsciousness by the slumber evoking timbre of Sabbath harmonies. Yet you will find these same sacred airs under a new guise wakefully inspiring.

Such is the magic wrought by Will Marion Cook, conductor of the American Symphony Orchestra and Singers, whose musical triumphs are known from coast to coast. In one of the most artistic programs ever given by any group of professionals, these thirty or more men of the colored race are exemplifying this new trend in the musical world of today.

As truly American as is its constitution is the music which the Negro race has evolved from the rhythmic half-chants originating in the southern cotton fields. They have emotionalized the play impulse and given music the high lights and subtle humor of syncopation. Later day "jazz," looked at askance by many professed "high brows," is strongly indicative of a new development in music. It is to harmony what "free verse" is to poetry.

Music lovers and others are equally attracted by the novel variations offered by these American singers and players whose repertoire ranges from the well known classics—vocal and instrumental—to the appealing strains of Negro spirituals and plantation melodies. Glimpses of the naive humor which so-called "black face" artists have never successfully imitated creep into these programs almost spontaneously. Audience and players alike respond to the "mere joy in the doing" which these performers infuse into their music making.

THE PHILADELPHIA ORCHESTRA PLANS

Plans for the coming season of the Philadelphia Orchestra are rapidly maturing. Mr. Stokowski, who spent the summer in Seal Harbor, Me., studying new scores and arranging his scheme for the season, promises programs of unusual interest. Some of the novelties on the early programs include Charles Martin Loeffler's "Pagan Poem," for piano, three trumpets, English horn obligato and orchestra, a work by the Russian composer, Moussorgsky, entitled "La Nuit sur le Mont Chauve." The standard works will, of course, figure prominently on the programs during the season. The chorus plans are arousing wide interest, and the applications indicate that the membership will be of unusually high quality. Under the splendid training of Mr. Townsend the chorus offers special inducements to all singers who are seriously interested in music.

FRANCES PAPERT

Frances Papert, mezzo-contralto, has returned to Chicago after a very successful season in opera in the south.

The Dallas Daily Times, in speaking of her Azucena in "Il Trovatore" said: "She was superb, displaying dramatic ability that is rarely found on the operatic stage and a voice which is all that could be desired."

HENRY TO APPEAR WITH SEATTLE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Harold Henry, the brilliant pianist, is in such demand that even playing five recitals in a week, whenever it is possible to do so, he has only three open dates between November 7, when he gives his Aeolian Hall, New York, recital, and the Christmas holidays. Proportionally there are only the same number of unfilled dates after January 1. Henry's tour to the Pacific Coast has been postponed until the end of January (he was to have gone west the beginning of that month) to permit of his appearing as soloist with the Seattle Symphony Orchestra in February.

ARTISTS FOR DULUTH

Mrs. George S. Richards to Present Galli-Curci, Garden, Heifetz, Sistine Singers and Rachmaninoff

Mrs. George S. Richards announces her fourth annual all-star musical course which is by far the most ambitious and interesting that has been offered in the musical life of Duluth.

The series of five great concerts will open October 6 at the Duluth Armory, with the world famous quartet of soloists from the Sistine Choir of the Vatican, Rome.

Mme. Galli-Curci is next to appear on the course, the last of October.

Jascha Heifetz, the 18-year-old Russian violinist whom Mrs. Richards booked to play here last fall before the "flu" epidemic canceled his engagement, will appear at the Armory October 24.

Next to appear on this unusual series of concerts is Mary Garden, "incomparable artist."

There is nothing that can be added to what has already been said about this famous artist's ability on the operatic stage and concert stage.

Serge Rachmaninoff, the famous composer and pianist who has been the man of the hour in the east, will appear January 20.

CHARLES CARVER'S RECITAL

Charles Carver, artist-pupil of Frank La Forge, gave a recital in the beautiful La Forge-Berumen studios, New York, last Tuesday evening. The many admirers of the voice and art of this gifted singer received the program with rapturous applause, and demanded many encores. Carver is an artist who must be reckoned with. His voice is a genuine bass, reaching as low as B flat below low C, and of a rich mellow quality that is rarely found among bassos. His training has been conducted entirely by Frank La Forge, as young Carver was "discovered" by La Forge soon after leaving college. Mr. La Forge invited Mme. Schumann-Heink to hear the young man, which resulted in his being engaged for the transcontinental tournee of last season. Carver received the highest praise from the press and public. His gifts for interpretation are of the most pronounced kind and it is the opinion of even such authorities as Mmes. Sembrich and Schumann-Heink that the future holds very great things in store for this twenty-one year old artist.

The coming season will find him giving recitals in New York, Boston and Chicago, where a numerous public will have an opportunity to judge of his art. Frank LaForge is arranging his appearances.

WAR CAMP COMMUNITY SINGING

In order to satisfy the increasing demand for leaders of community singing the War Camp Community Service will inaugurate on October 10 the fall term of its training school for volunteer song leaders in New York City. This New York School is one of thirty-seven that have been conducted by the War Camp Community Service throughout the country. Six of these have been for colored song leaders. The schools also included a teachers' normal class and a school for playground supervisors, which was also attended by boys and girls from the playgrounds. Two schools were held exclusively for girls. A school has lately been inaugurated by the War Camp Community Service in Boston, and another is being opened in Los Angeles, Calif.

Holloway—Wilma Allen Holloway, soprano, has returned to Chicago after spending the summer at Paw Paw Lake, Mich. Mrs. Holloway, with Miss George at piano, gave a program at the summer Chautauqua, eliciting much favorable comment for her charming voice and program, which was arranged to meet popular and artistic tastes. Her encores of "Birth of Morn" and "Annie Laurie," with harp accompaniment, were received with special enthusiasm.

THE CHICAGO MENDELSSOHN CLUB

Announcement is made of the usual three concerts of the Mendelssohn Club, and this will, also quite as usual, be one of the most popular items of the Chicago season.

From the attractive circular being distributed we quote as follows:

Announcement is made of the coming season's subscription concerts to be given by the Chicago Mendelssohn Club and assisting soloists in Orchestra Hall. The Chicago Mendelssohn Club continues under the rare musical leadership of Mr. Harrison M. Wild, who has arranged for three programs of great interest.

HARRISON WILD
Conductor

First Concert December 11, 1919

The program will consist of a collection of works dedicated to the club and its conductor. This remarkable program is given in celebration of the opening of the club's second quarter century and the beginning of Mr. Wild's twenty-fifth season as musical conductor.

Frederick Stevenson has added a wondrous number entitled "Mors Et Vita," with the heroic tenor's solo part specially thought out for Mr. Theo Karle, who has been secured as soloist for this occasion.

THEODORE HARRIS

Mr. Karle will also offer several groups of solo numbers. Orpha Kendall Holstman will be heard in the incidental soprano solos of the evening.

Second Concert February 12, 1920

The collaboration of Theodore Harrison with the club in three compositions by Stanford will be one of the important offerings of the evening. Mr. Harrison will be heard in several groups of songs.

The club will present in addition to the above several new and vitally interesting compositions for male chorus.

Third Concert April 29, 1920

Miss Garrison will be the soloist of the evening and in addition to singing the soprano solos in a cantata with the Mendelssohn Club will give two groups of songs. The club will offer some of the best known compositions for men's voices and two or three very attractive novelties.

A Word Regarding the Chicago Mendelssohn Club

This organization is unique in the musical world. It is not a money making institution. Whatever it receives as income it returns to its clientele in music. World-renowned soloists are presented. The best composers are brought to produce compositions for the club's presentation.

Kanders—The first concert of the Humanitarian Cult season will be given at the Hippodrome in New York Sunday evening, October 5, the soprano soloist being Helene Kanders, who will be heard in her own recitals at Carnegie Hall November 15 and January 13.

THE AMERICAN SYNCOPATED ORCHESTRA AND THE MUSIC IT PLAYS

"Jazz" is here to stay, abhor it as you may. But the common, music hall variety of jazz differs from that of the concert hall as greatly as the riotous tiger lily from the orchid.

Interpreted by the finer instruments of the orchestra rather than the less subtle components of a band, jazz becomes a thing of exquisite melody. This is the unusual triumph of the American Syncopated Orchestra and Singers, who have adapted the best that the colored race has yet produced musically and combined it with the best numbers from European and American master musicians.

Will Marion Cook, foremost among his people as a composer producing really American music, has surrounded himself with the best colored musicians in the world today and personally conducts the orchestra.

To those who recall the delight afforded by the jubilee singers of a decade ago, the fact that each of the thirty men comprising the organization is a vocal artist as well as a skilled instrumentalist means much. The cadence of the old Negro spirituals that these remarkable singers present is like nothing else in the world—a soul stirring harmony that uplifts and delights.

When to all the technical beauty of a symphony program, as played by master artists, is added the rich tone color of perfectly trained voices, there is in store for those who listen an hour or more of unalloyed pleasure.

Will Marion Cook and his players are received everywhere with enthusiastic approval and return engagements are the rule rather than the exception.

LILLIAN MAY GINRICH AT LOCKPORT

Lillian May Ginrich, soprano, of Philadelphia, was one of the successful singers at Lockport and also made many friends through her unaffected and charming manner.

On account of indisposition she did not appear on Monday afternoon as announced, but, having recovered, on Friday afternoon instead.

It is through this circumstance that no mention was made of Miss Ginrich's work in the Music News review of the Lockport Festival which followed the event session by session and, except in this one (inadvertant) case, omitted no artist or composition of the week.

Miss Ginrich has a powerful voice and a broad style of singing, and she has also excellent control of all her resources and is able to color and modulate her readings in an altogether pleasing way.

Her first group was devoted to Horatio Parker and she was especially successful with his "The Lark Now Leaves His Watry Nest," which she sang with spirit and good tonal quality.

Her second group comprised "Bitterness of Love" (Dunn), "An Invitation" (Harold V. Milligan), "Lullaby," an American Indian song, arranged by Lieurance, and "The Year's at the Springs" (Beach), all of which she presented with good musicianship and in effective interpretations.

MARIAN CORYELL'S NEW SONG

"Contentment," the latest of the song children of Marian Coryell, has reached the market, and will unquestionably attain a still higher plane of popularity than has any other of the works which have already been used.

The poem of "Contentment" (written by Sara Teasdale) is graceful and full of an intensity of thought and feeling, and Miss Coryell has set this to a melody line at once appropriate and beautiful, while the piano accompaniment, as is usually the case in the Coryell songs, is both skillful and effective.

Undoubtedly "Contentment" will have a vogue.

RENE LUND ON THE SOUTH SIDE

Rene Lund, baritone, was the chief attraction in a concert given on last Thursday evening at the Bethlehem Lutheran Church, when he had the exceptional advantage of sympathetic, intelligent and artistic accompaniments from Miss Alice R. Deal.

Mr. Lund, the possessor of a beautiful natural voice and a thoroughly developed musicianship, proves himself, on his every appearance, to be a thinker and a student, for not only are his numbers prepared with the utmost exactitude and finish, but also his presentation of each individual composition on his program proclaims the fact of careful analysis and polish, and invariably he gets at the very root of the matter and offers an interpretation at once logical and effective.

His first group (not heard by this writer) included numbers of Korling and Homer, while the second was entirely American, and included "My Dear" (Salter), "Such a Li'l Fellow" (Dichmont), "Rose Kissed Me Today" (Harling), "The Piper" (Stoughton), and "Nature Awaits Thee" (Warner).

The Salter piece has been used sufficiently now to have established its value and its identity, and proves, in the Lund reading, to be attractive always.

The Dichmont song is quaint, homely and altogether to the liking of the general audience.

The short song by Harling is attractive when presented with clear enunciation and keen insight into meanings, and these items were perfectly conserved by Mr. Lund at this time, while in "The Piper" he disclosed his ability to deal tellingly with rather harsh and thoroughly dramatic composition, which, nevertheless, is one having its definite value in color and contrast.

"Nature Awaits Thee" is a song which requires much introspectivity, as also a well-used voice, and to its presentation Mr. Lund brought both possibilities, with the result that the impression made by it was vivid and pleasing. C. E. W.

ANTHONY LINDEN

Anthony Linden, the Chicago flutist, who has recently been engaged as principal solo flute with the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, will make his first appearance with that body as soloist on October 26, at which time he will play the beautiful "Il Vento," by Briccialdi.

This remarkable piece was specially arranged for solo flute and symphony orchestra by Adolf G. Hoffman of Chicago.

FRANCES CAREY-LIBBE

Frances Carey-Libbe will be much in evidence this coming season in oratorio, recital, club work, etc. She will also teach a limited number of pupils and coach singers for oratorio, church and recital singing. She is making a specialty of the "La Ballade of De Spere," for reader, cellist, pianist, violinist, and contralto, and it should appeal to women's clubs especially.

CONFERENCE OF DIRECTORS OF COLLEGE MUSIC DEPARTMENTS

Arrangements have been made for a conference of directors of college music departments in connection with the Philadelphia meeting of the Music Teachers' National Association on Monday evening, December 29, at the close of the informal dinner. Arthur L. Manchester, chairman of the committee on music in the college, will preside.

The conference is to discuss questions relating to the administration of college music departments in an effort to devise ways and means for developing uniformity of methods of administration and uniform entrance requirements and courses of study, and ultimately to plan for the organization of an association of college music departments, under a constitution and with the necessary official machinery to investigate this entire field of musical work.

Among the topics to be discussed are these:

Regulation governing uniformity and thoroughness in grading and passing students.

Feasibility and nature of entrance requirements in music and academic subjects.

The substitution of thoroughly musical training for mere digital and vocal dexterity.

Establishment of uniform and comprehensive courses of study.

Development of true and complete co-operation between academic and music departments.

Closer association and co-operation between music departments of different institutions.

The placing of college music departments on the same plane of appreciation and influence as is now occupied by academic departments.

Long papers will be avoided. A short snappy presentation will be followed by a general discussion pointing to definite action. Every effort will be made to do real business and avoid generalization. Already a sufficient number of representative directors have expressed their intention to be present, to insure an interesting discussion and definite results.

OLIVE NEVIN

Following the week at Lockport, where for three successive years Olive Nevin has given gladly, enthusiastically and helpfully of her time, voice, art, strength, and of her whole self for the furtherance of the great American Festival fast becoming an established and permanent fact there, she says she had her first real vacation. This was at a house party in Allenhurst, N. J. She says she accepted the invitation distinctly and well understood not to sing, but to swim. Mr. and Mrs. Michael Kasanoff were the other guests at Mrs. Oliver Hershman's lovely home, and it was a sort of godspeed to them that the party was held. Mr. Kasanoff takes up his duties as assistant conductor of the Minneapolis Orchestra next month, and so New York will lose two excellent musicians. Mrs. Kasanoff has been Miss Nevin's accompanist in and near New York ever since she has been in the field, so it is not hard to understand why a big crowd gathered at the Hershman home last Sunday night. Miss Nevin had been swimming to her heart's content and said she was too full of salt water to sing, but she did.

WHERE WAS FREDERIK WHEN THE LIGHT WENT OUT?

While Frederik Frederiksen and his wife were playing the slow movement from the Wieniawski Concerto in one of the summer concerts at Lake Geneva all the lights in the hall suddenly went out.

But neither of these dependable artists was the least dismayed by so small a mishap, and they continued to the end of the Concerto in the dark, and, strange coincidence, the lights came on again just as they were playing the final chords.

Among the numbers played in these concerts by Mr. and Mrs. Frederiksen were "Solveig's Song" (Grieg), "Two Swedish Folk Dances" (Hagg-Aulin), Mazurka (Wieniawski), "Romance and Finale From Concerto" (Wieniawski), Suite for Piano and Violin, Op. 44 (Schutt), Sonata in C Minor, Piano and Violin (Grieg), "Elegie" (Sauret), "Elfentanz" (Popper-Halir), Sonata in G Major (Beethoven), two duets for two violins and piano (with Miss Woodward), "Berceuse" (Ames) and "Allegretto-Serenade" (Sinding).

CECIL FANNING

One of the finest of the early season recitals will be that of Cecil Fanning, with H. B. Turpin at the piano, the event being booked for Kimball Hall on the evening of November 6, under the management of F. Wight Neumann.

In this recital Mr. Fanning will sing a group of songs by Cadman, Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, Vanderpool and O'Hara, the verses in each case being from his own pen.

There will also be a group of old French operatic airs, new to Chicago, a group of modern French, and the great ballad, "Archibald Douglas," by Loewe.

The season of Mr. Fanning and Mr. Turpin begins on October 4 at Columbus, Ohio, and from that point they proceed to Harrisburg, Pa., New York City, Boston, and St. Louis.

AT THE WHITNEW TEW STUDIOS

At the September Sunday Musicale of the Whitney Tew Studios there was in evidence the same cordiality, the same beautifully prepared program, the same two exceptionally gifted and experienced accompanists—Lucy Levy and Harriet Cartwright—and there was also an audience which was charmed with the function and delighted with the music.

The program contained the following numbers and performers:

Caro Nome (Rigoletto).....Verdi

Mme. Colbran-Melius

Mr. Tew, while the very soul of hospitality and courtesy, is yet distinctly and definitely informal in the Sunday afternoon functions, and he tells the audience, engagingly, of the status and the trials of the performers.

He often asks a pupil to repeat a song or a passage which, through nervousness, has not attained the possible standard of the performer, and in every way he makes the affairs helpful to those who take part, as well as delightful for those who listen.

It is this informality and this evident "doing of his best" on the part of each pupil which makes the Tew Studio a rendezvous on Sundays for those who wish to be entertained, and also it is the place where those who wish to engage young artists for church, concert or recital may well (and probably do) congregate, for out of the abundance of talent and attainment here there can surely always be found some who are ready for the bigger stage and the longer flight.

Detailed comment on Sunday's program is withheld simply because this writer heard only a part, and he wishes, next time, to tell something about each one on the program.

He cannot refrain, however, from again commending Mrs. Alcott and Mme. Melius on their continued show of advancement, and in the case of Edwin Iles he must delay the signature of the article long enough to remark that here is a genuinely thrilling talent and so conspicuously intelligent a singer as to arouse the feeling that unusual success awaits only full growth.

VIOLET HOLMES-TIDY AGAIN SCORES SUCCESS WITH HER SONG CYCLE

Mr. and Mrs. Frederik Frederiksen entertained a few friends with a program of music at their home studio on September 26.

Mme. Holmes-Tidy's fine song cycle, "Life's Journey," was again beautifully sung by Mme. Gildroy Scott, and the audience was enthusiastic in approval.

Mr. Frederiksen and Gordon Campbell played exquisitely three Sonatas for Violin and Piano, i. e., works by Brahms, Carpenter and Sjogren.

Wood—Elizabeth Wood, well-known contralto, opened her season with a recital at the Centenary Collegiate Institute, Hackettstown, N. J., on September 26. A southern tour will again be included in Miss Wood's bookings, also her second New York recital at Aeolian Hall in the spring, and her first Chicago recital while on western tour. During the summer, spent at Silver Lake, N. Y., Miss Wood has prepared some very interesting programs. H. E. Riegger, personal representative for Miss Wood, announces a very busy season for this splendid artist.

MARIO SALVINI

Activities at the Salvini School of Singing have already begun for the season at the attractive location, 206 West Seventy-first street. Private musicales will frequently be given, while several special concerts in large halls will be included in the schedule. Mr. Salvini has some very promising pupils in his class, and in addition to developing their voices and imparting the fundamental principles of breath control, he dwells upon the importance of accurate phrasing and musicianly interpretation. Mr. Salvini believes that health is a most necessary requisite for every vocalist, and he advocates exercise and fresh air. He lives near Central Park, where he walks or rides on horseback, and his Summer School at Edgemere, Long Island, is in a beautiful environment. Referring to a recent suburban visit in the vicinity of Greater New York, he states: "The country was beautiful, the ocean in all its splendor. Myriads of lights over it made an aureola, and the rhythmical beating of the waves seemed to sound a hymn to the glory and majesty of Nature. I think the sea, with its mysteries, depth and overwhelming power, is the most wonderful piece of creation."

MARIO SALVINI

This eminent master of singing evidently believes in following Nature's example in the matters of inspiration and generosity, for he is offering $2,000 in scholarships, which will be awarded before a competent committee of judges this fall.

Moody Institute—The Moody Bible Institute announces that beginning October 5 Sunday afternoon Bible expositions will be given at 4 o'clock in the institute auditorium. The principal speakers for the fall season will be Rev. James M. Gray, D. D., dean of the institute, and Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, D. D., late of Wycliffe College, Toronto.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.

On September 16 Cecil Arden opened the musical season in Syracuse in a joint recital with Charles Courboin, the noted organist. Although it was Miss Arden's first appearance in Syracuse the audience was so large that there was a row of standees. From her first number she captured the hearts of her hearers. Her first group included "Del mio Core" (Hadyn), "La Bella Calandrina" (Jomelli), "O Sleep, Why Dost Thou Leave Me" (Handel), and "The Mermaid's Song" (Haydn). After this group she sang "The Pretty Creature" as an encore in a delightfully arch manner.

Her second group was comprised of two Donezetti arias, "O Mio Fernando" and "Brindisi," from "Lucrezia Borgia," and for her last group she sang "Danny Boy" (Wetherly), "Brown Birdeen" (Buzzi-Peccia), "Only to Thee" (Branscombe), and Massenet's "Nuit d'Espagne." This last number is better known as a part of an orchestral suite from which Massenet arranged it, but it makes an equally beautiful song. It was delivered with a vivacity and charm which carried one back to old Spain. At the close of the concert Miss Arden responded to many encores, and as a final number sang "Dixie" with a verve and expression which only a true daughter of the South could give to that most American of all our patriotic airs.

Kressman—Miss Elsa Kressman, soprano, has severed her connection with the Normal Park Presbyterian Church and accepted one in the quartet at the New England Congregational.

IS THE VOWEL "E" THE BEST ADAPTED FOR VOCAL PRACTICE?

By WILLIAM A. C. ZERFFI

That the vowel "E" is a favorite one with vocalists will, I am sure, be readily admitted. In the following I have endeavored to show that the reasons given for the use of this vowel as a medium for vocal practice are in reality based upon erroneous conclusions.

One of the most frequent explanations which are given to justify its use is, "It is the best vowel for concentrating the tone," but unfortunately it is at the same time the easiest to "pinch," and continued practice upon "E" is liable to have an exceedingly bad effect upon the voice.

In the first place, what is it that makes one vowel sound so differently from another, and why should "E" be given the honor of being the vowel best adapted for vocal practice?

The combination of air waves which we call "voice" and which is originated in the larynx by the vibration of the vocal cords, consists of a fundamental tone (which is the actual pitch of the tone sung), and a varying number of "overtones" or, as they are sometimes called, "partial tones." As the first of these overtones is an octave higher than its fundamental, the second a fifth above that, the third a fourth above that, and so on, in any tone sung, there are a number of tones of different pitch present. It is the presence of these overtones which enables us to form the different vowels which we use, and they also form a very important part of the tone.

As a large cavity is needed to reinforce a low tone, and a small cavity to reinforce a high tone, by varying the size of the mouth cavity we are able to make certain of these overtones more audible than others, and the vowel sounds are the result of different combinations of these overtones with the fundamental.

For instance, in order to produce the vowel "E," it is necessary that the higher overtones predominate. It will be found that when singing "E" the tongue is raised, which reduces the size of the mouth cavity. When singing "OO," which vowel demands the predominance of the lower overtones, the mouth cavity is enlarged by the bringing forward of the lips.

As the production of the vowel "E" has been shown to require the raising of the tongue, which is accomplished by the contraction of the tongue muscles, and as the contraction of the tongue muscles is so very liable to bring about an "interference" with the action on the vocal organ (see article, "Voice Production Without Interference," September 12th issue of Music News), it can hardly be good practice to use a vowel which might cause the tone production to be hampered.

As "Ah" can be produced by merely opening the mouth and without any change in the position of the tongue, it would seem that it has a far more legitimate claim to be the best adapted for vocal practice. Both "Oh" and "OO" require thte lips to be brought forward, and "A" requires a slight raising of the tongue. "Ah," which requires none of these movements, would therefore appear to be the most suitable for general practice.

The position of the mouth when singing the vowels is extremely important, and particularly so in regard to the singing of "E." Unfortunately a practice has arisen which insists upon the drawing up and back of the lips when singing this vowel. This is an entirely unnecessary movement, and is liable to interfere considerably with the tone production. The drawing up of the lips is never necessary, and the vowels "E," "A" and "Ah" can be sung without any lip movement whatever. "Oh" and "OO," however, do require the lips to be brought forward.

The teaching of singing is so very laregly of a negative character that it is only necessary to remove the "wrong," and the "right" will be free to assert itself.

A NEW ORGAN COMPOSITION

"O Beautiful Night" is the title of a new organ composition by Edwin E. Harder which is put out in fine shape by the E. E. Harder Company, 175 West Washington street, Chicago, and which is of so melodious and attractive a character musically that it will, undoubtedly, be much used by those who wish a short and moderately easy piece for church voluntary or offertory or one to help make up a group of short pieces for concert.

DEATH OF ADELINA PATTI

London, September 27.

Adelina Patti, prima donna, died this morning at Craig-y-Nos Castle, Penycae, South Wales, at the age of seventy-six years. Mme. Patti had been suffering for some time with heart trouble and her condition recently had necessitated the attendance of several specialists.

It is understood that Mme. Patti will be buried in Paris, but owing to the railroad strike it has been impossible thus far to make definite arrangements.

Adelina Patti was born to song. Madrid was the city of her nativity and 1843 the year of her birth. Her mother, Mme. Barili Patti, was the prima donna of the opera company at the Grand Theater in the Spanish capital, and was much admired by the Madrilenos. Adelina's parents emigrated from Spain to America in 1844, her father, Salvatore Patti, joining Enquirico, the buffo, in the management of the Italian opera in Chambers street, New York City.

Adelina could sing almost before she could speak, and she made her first public appearance in Tripler Hall, New York, later the site of Burton's Theater and the old Winter Garden.

She was only sixteen when she made her first appearance in grand opera at the Academy of Music in New York on November 24, 1859.

Patti was married at the age of twenty-four to the Marquis of Caux. She divorced him. Her second husband was Ernesto Nicolini, the tenor, whom she married in 1886. He died in January of 1898, and one year and one week later she married Baron Rolf Cederstrom.

Patti made her final tour of America, appearing in concert, in 1904, and in December, 1906, she gave her farewell concert in Albert Hall, London. Thenceforth she made her home in Craig-y-Nos Castle at Ystradgynlais in Breconshire, Wales.

Chicago was still a wooden pioneer town into which the canvas-covered wagons lumbered with settlers from the East when Adelina Patti came here for the first time, in 1853.—Chicago Tribune.

. . . . . .

Contrary to the experience of most confirmed concertgoers of the past quarter century, the first recollection of this writer in reference to Adelina Patti's singing does not center around either opera or concert, but, strangely enough, oratorio.

It was in Cincinnati, considerably more than twenty-five years ago, and just to show that they were able to do something which had never been done before in the world and would not be likely to ever be done again, the Cincinnati Festival Association engaged Mme. Patti as the soprano soloist of their midwinter performance of "The Messiah," and filled out the quartet with Myron Whitney, as much king of oratorio as Patti was ever queen of opera; Annie Louise Carey, as popular at the moment as Patti herself, and Theodore Toedt, a very good tenor who has long since passed into desuetude.

Patti was paid five thousand dollars, and she sang only—unless my memory is at fault—"Rejoice Greatly" and "I Know That My Redeemer Liveth," being immensely better in the first than the last named.

To me she seemed a wonderful singer at that time, although Springer Hall was an enormous place and not adapted to showing the finer qualities of her voice.

I did not hear her again until, during the first week of the existence of the Auditorium in Chicago, she appeared in a number of operas.

Particularly do I remember "Semiramide," for it so happened that Emma Abbott, the "honest" little American, was at the same time singing the opera in English at the Grand Opera House, and at the moment it seemed to me that her performance was the better of the two.

For—while Patti always was the most marvelous singer in the world, she was a very poor actress, and her work as the Queen in this opera was certainly not impressive.

And, besides being an attractive actress, Emma Abbott was also a very good singer. But—Patti was heard at other times and in other (and better) environment at various other times, and, like every one else who ever came under the spell of her wonderful voice, she left a memory of charm and beauty which will never fade.

And, besides being so wonderful a singer, Adelina Patti was an equally remarkable business woman, and it is owing to this fact that she made during her life something like five million dollars, and, best of all, had plenty of it laid by for her declining years.

Patti has always been the model as well as the despair of all younger singers, and it is not amiss to say that if some of these could emulate her thrift and her business policies their own voices might reap greater results than they do.

Along this line W. L. Hubbard, the old-new musical critic of the Chicago Tribune, tells the following (true) story:

$2,500 Per Shoe

"She sent back word that she did not go on the stage until the $5,000 was in her hands. He sought to persuade. She was adamant. No money, no performance. But she was gracious. She would don her costume so as to be ready, but she would not put on her shoes until the $5,000 came. Two thousand five hundred was sent in. Patti put on one shoe. But the other shoe remained conspicuously placed on her dressing table instead of on her shapely foot. Half an hour later the other $2,500 arrived. The second shoe was donned, the overture began, and Patti appeared on the stage smiling and gracious, and sang as she always sang."

WELCOME, MR. HUBBARD!

W. L. Hubbard, who resumes his old-time position as music critic on the Chicago Tribune, is as welcome as the flowers of spring.

What we have suffered during his absence tongue and typewriter refuse to tell, and we will certainly appreciate his acumen, his skill and his style.

THE PRESS AT LARGE

In this division of Music News there will be printed, week by week, comments on various concerts and artists which have appeared in the daily and weekly press of the country. This is done in the belief that this matter will be found to be of great interest to a large number of people. This is in no sense an advertising department, and no items will be accepted for pay

Negro Folk Songs at Philharmonic Hall

It will be a great pity if London musicians are misled by some newspaper reports, and by the title of the "The Southern Syncopated" Orchestra, into supposing that the entertainment now being given twice daily at the Philharmonic Hall is a kind of glorified Christy minstrel show, with a jazz band accompaniment. True, the performers are all of African descent, and ragtime, very strepitously played, is a prominent feature. But good music is played as well, and on the vocal side the concerts are of exceptional interest. There are two delightful soprano soloists—Mrs. H. K. Reavis and Miss Lottie Gee—and some wonderfully effective male voice choral performances of old negro "spirituals," or religious folk songs. Such things as "I Got a Robe," "Couldn't Hear Nobody Pray," "Go Down, Moses," and "Joshua Fit the Battle of Jericho," are unique in their quaint simplicity and pathos. Will Marion Cook is the conductor and his methods are as unconventional as is most of the music. Altogether, the concerts are among the most novel and refreshing entertainments in London today.—Monthly Musical Record (London).

Bianca Randall

A few press comments:

By the skill and ease with which she sang "Un bel di," from "Madame Butterfly," and "Elsa's Dream," from "Lohengrin," Miss Randall completely charmed her audience, while other numbers of hers were warmly applauded. "Annie Laurie" was given as an encore, and was sung with such grace, such winsomeness, that it won for her an ovation.—The Constitution, Atlanta, Ga.

To an unusually appreciative audience Miss Bianca Randall gave a most interesting song recital Friday night at Cable Hall, under the auspices of the Music Study Club.

Miss Randall's gifts are pronouncedly superior, her technic is flawless. To this is added her beauty and poise. Her four groups of songs last night showed temperament, spirit and understanding.—Evening News, Birmingham, Ala.

Miss Randall sings equally well in French, Italian and English. Her voice is a pure lyric soprano of wonderfully sweet quality and absolutely true pitch. Added to this is a personality more than ordinarily attractive, and the true spirit of the artist, and the result is a combination of attractiveness and force that is winning fame for her.—Mobile Register.

The artiste of the evening is a strikingly handsome young woman with a magnetic personality and a captivating stage presence. She has a splendidly cultivated voice and projects her own individuality into her singing, which renders it doubly enjoyable. Her high tones are peculiarly good, and in her presentation of the selections from "Madame Butterfly" her voice and manner of singing displayed an art that has reached perfection.—Ledger, Birmingham, Ala.

Miss Randall's voice is a lyric soprano of fine quality, and her musical art is of the very best. She sings with temperament and dramatic spirit. Added to this—she is an uncommonly beautiful young woman, and her stage presence is captivating.—Age-Herald, Birmingham, Ala.

Miss Randall received great applause when she sang "Un Bel Di," from "Madame Butterfly." She also sang with beauty of tone and elegant diction "When Celia Sings," by Moir; "Not as Other Lassies," by Hugo-Wolf; "A Birthday" and "An Open Secret," by Woodman. Every number was encored.—Georgian, Atlanta, Ga.

Miss Bianca Randall sang an exquisite cycle of songs to a responsive audience. "When Celia Sings," by Moir; "Not as Other Lassies," by Hugo-Wolf; "A Birthday" and "An Open Secret," by Woodman, and the aria from "Madame Butterfly" were enthusiastically and continuously applauded. But a profound stillness greeted the opening note of "Annie Laurie," and when the last notes died away into the echoing silence, tears were streaming down many a countenance, and the tense silence was perhaps the most eloquent tribute paid to the wonderfully sympathetic voice.—Atlantic Journal, Atlanta, Ga.

Miss Randall's voice is a lyric soprano of unusual clearness, great sweetness, resonant, of large range, and is under thorough control.

Her high notes are particularly beautiful, while those of the lower register are full and clear. Her enunciation is remarkably fine, and she sings with much charm.—Clarion-Ledger, Jackson, Miss.

Miss Randall's voice was full and pleasing, and her selections of songs delighted her audience. A lyric soprano, flexible and true.

Her phrasing was excellent and her training gives her both poise and interpretative powers.—Chattanooga News, Chattanooga, Tenn.

Bianca Randall appeared last night before a critical and fashionable audience. Her success was immediate and pronounced.

Miss Randall has a soprano of fine quality, which she uses with skill and taste, and she is gifted with much personal charm.—Commercial, New York.

French Opera

My impression of the French style of presenting opera is that the French enjoy what they see: the scenery, the acting of the singers, as much as they do the melody or harmony of the music. They have the dramatic instinct well developed.—Correspondence to Dallas (Tex.) Press.

Lois Adler at Seattle

A surprisingly large audience was lured from last night's fleet throng to step into bypaths of music—music the most intimate, charming and personal. Lois Adler, Chicago virtuoso and pianist of fine attainments, was the magnet, and the auditorium of the Cornish School of Music was where it happened. The pianist reaches the concert stage via the studios of Godowsky, Ganz, Bauer and Calvin Brainard Cady. In the player's Brahms the writer found most pleasure, that composer exhibiting to best advantage the scholarship of the player and her self-restrained, well-commanded art. I do not mean a finnicky, self-centered performance, but one controlled by classic impulses rather than animated bravura, rhapsodical inspiration. A Caprice and a Scherzo, the latter in no playful but sententious mood, were her admirable Brahms offerings. Rubinstein's Barcarolle was another charming bit. The Mendelssohn sketch could hardly be improved upon by any player, and a quality of refined poesy invested her Liszt Fifth Rhapsody and the same composer's Waltz Impromptu. Her Chopin C sharp minor Scherzo I have seldom heard played so fast, but its effectiveness was not lost, though altered, and for encore she did a Chopin posthumous waltz in spirit a la Vienna. —Walter Anthony in Seattle (Wash.) Post-Intelligencer.

DONATO PARADISO RESUMES ACTIVITIES

The excellent Italian vocal pedagogue resumed his season's activities on September 22. His class this season is much larger than last year, and his popularity and prestige are growing apace. He is one of New York's eminent pedagogues, and his exceptional abilities have, justly, placed him in the ranks not only of good teachers, but honest ones, too. His pupil-artist, Henrietta Conrad, is now giving a series of concerts throughout the East, and is meeting with fine success. Mr. Paradiso predicts an eventful career for this pupil.

THE ANNOUNCEMENT OF GERMAN OPERA IN NEW YORK AROUSES A STORM OF RESENTMENT

At a mass meeting of the United Posts in New York the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"Whereas, Certain citizens are planning the production of German opera in the German language by German singers in New York through the Star Opera Company, and

"Whereas, It is our belief that propaganda for German kultur will be spread through all the underground channels which were employed previous to the recent war in an attempt to make Americans forget what has happened in the last few years. Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the New York County Organization of the American Legion hereby goes on record as being thoroughly opposed to the production of German opera in the German language in this city during the coming winter, as imcompatible with "one hundred per cent Americanism," and be it further

"Resolved, That this organization employ every peaceful means within its power to prevent the production of German opera in the German language in New York City."

A singer who gave her name as Phadrig Ago'n, and who admitted that she had been engaged for the German operas, although she is (she says) herself an American, created great excitement by insisting, at this meeting, on holding the floor and telling those present what she thought about the matter.

She said that Wagner could only be properly sung in German and gave as one reason for allowing the operas to be sung in New York that the German opera singers engaged for these performances had no other means of making a livelihood and that by being permitted to present the Wagner opera in German they would be prevented from becoming dependent on the community.

According to the New York Times, this speaker was hissed down and was, finally, compelled to retire from the hall.

VIOLIN CLUB AT MANKATO, MINN.

September 12, 1919.

Music News:

I'm inclosing information regarding "The Violin Club" and I hope other cities will want to start violin clubs, to encourage talent and furnish an opportunity for "appearances" under ideal circumstances, as those appearing do not play with the idea of showing their advancement or limitations but rather the artistic and proper place for things.

One big orchestra concert.

An invitation to furnish a program for the Mankato Music Club.

Bring artists to appear for the club (Irma Seydel, etc.).

The following appeared in The Mankato Daily Review:

The Violin Club, under the direction and supervision of Mrs. Minnie Hubbard, one of Mankato's leading violin artists, was organized at a meeting held at the Y. M. C. A. Saturday evening last. The organization of this club fulfills a long felt need of something of this sort whereby musicians of the city can meet together for study and in addition to the benefits derived from the study, will be able to arrange programs which will be given during the winter season. Everything possible to encourage musicians will be done and the club will also bring a number of noted artists to the city who will appear in concerts at the various club meetings.

A membership of about forty musicians has already been secured and it is the desire of the club to secure as many members as possible and any musician in the city, not only violinists, but any other musician, is invited to join the club. A nominal membership fee is charged and a small admission fee will be charged for the meetings of the club, at which time a program will be given.

Officers of the club are as follows: President, Ruby Westenhaver; vice-president, Charlotte Hodapp; secretary, Irma Paegel; treasurer, Frank Suess.

The New Artistic Forces of the Metropolitan

The sphinx has spoken. The prospectus of the next Metropolitan season is to hand. I can and am in position to make preliminary comments concerning the new forces of the Broadway operatic temple. The first name to be noticed is that of Gabriella Bezanzoni, the contralto. I am told by those who have heard her that she will create a furor. Especially as Dalila she is expected to create a sensation and disturb some of her colleagues. In Italy her Carmen is considered a great interpretation. I am told that one critic has termed her "The Italian Calve." The Metropolitan is in dire need of something sensational. We have been fed with an overdose of the Carusonian regime. Alongside the Neapolitan tenor no artist under Mr. Gatti's regime has ever had a chance to climb the higher steps, in spite of some very excellent elements. Destinnova has arrived after many uncertain announcements. We are glad to have her. If the London reports are accurate, as we do not doubt they are, her reappearances at Covent Garden have elicited praise from our cousins. "Gioconda" is for her, so let us hope she is still the Emmy of the Chicago appearance of November, 1914, when she sang alongside Bassi.

Mabel Garrison will be given a chance to interpret big roles, but Evelyn Scotney, a former Boston Opera soprano, it is said, will make her colleague's star pall. Miss Scotney was heard by the writer in an audition, and if she sings as well as then I am sure that she will outdistance most of the other sopranos. Her voice is more brilliant than Miss Garrison's. It is not one of the hard organs; it is a soft, human instrument.

Again, we hope that the season will differ from the former ones. There are a great number of sopranos (new), but if I take as criterion the former seasons I expect them to sing the usual "Bonna serras" and "Adios." There are no new tenors, but enough, and good ones. Carolina Lazzari is a welcome addition. Amato, it is said, is resurrected, after a season of mediocre interpretations. We hope for the best. The new French conductor is expected to fill worthily Mr. Monteux's place. Mmes. Berat and Dua are welcome factors for the French repertoire, but no principal French artists are noted, except the ones mentioned.

Mr. Gatti has re-engaged Robert Couzinou, and with Leon Rothier, the French repertoire will still be a cosmopolitan possibility. The French operas are increased. To respond to a certain sentiment of admiration for the Bayreuth master, "Parsifal" will be given (in English), and so will Weber's "Oberon." Other details have already been reported.

Now we shall wait to see how Mr. Gatti will counterattack Campanini's throng. It will be an interesting battle—minus Oscar Hammerstein. The Metropolitan subscriptions are heavy. There can be no great deficit, and, then, what matters a few thousands of dollars to Otto H. Kahn and his associates? The season in New York promises to eclipse the former by far.

The Star Opera Company

On October 20 the Star Opera Company will commence its season of German operas at the Lexington Theater. Whatever the consensus of opinion, I am against the presentation of music in the German language. I am not a chauvinist, and I have no material interests to be conserved. I am impartial and imbued only with the sense of humane duty. My spirit, my heart and my conscience are alive, and very much so. Therefore, to me, the German language will remind of the famous manifest of the ninety-three German Intellectuals whose battle-cry, "Destroy French arts," still rings in my ears. To me the German language will be a reminder of the Kaiser's order, "Destroy all." The progress of the world is not due to languages, but to the ideas, principles and the philosophies preached either in rhetoric or oratory.

Be it known that the Star Opera Company of New York is an enterprise specifically organized for the Germans. He who wishes to listen to German works like "Oberon," by Weber, and "Parsifal," by Wagner, will enter the Metropolitan Opera House, where performances will be given in English. Lovers of Beethoven and Mozart will enter Carnegie Hall and Aeolian Hall, but those opposed to the German language will not enter the Lexington Opera House.

Critics will be present to watch and to listen. They will review the performances with impartiality, and so will I. As long as there is going to be no German manifestations to insult America, the press and the public (the moderate, not opposing the language) will follow an attitude of generosity. In the name of Music News I will review the presentations and will avoid any instigation, either collectively or individually, against the Star Opera Company, but I may add that the German language, with which I am familiar, is not the "grata language" to my ears. It will never be, any more. The German language has no place on the American stage, because the English language is our own idiom, and with it every individual should make it a point to express his thoughts. If we have the right to vote on American national policies, we must speak and sing in English.

Pupils of the New York School of Music and Arts Presented in Recital

Just on Central Park West, corner Ninety-fifth street, a very cozy building can be distinctively seen, no matter on which side you may chance to walk. To me it was invigorating to listen to a pupils' recital at this school, whose building happens to face the marvelous Central Park. To the pupils it must also be an inspiriting occasion to study more zealously at the New York School of Music and Arts located in such a picturesque location. The European conservatories can always be suspected, because they are situated, for the most part, in nonresidential districts. The New York school, whose director is Ralfe Sterner, in spite of being surrounded by private mansions, can still be identified as a strict conservatory. I do not know how numerous the rooms are, but what I have seen was delightful. The dining room, the teaching rooms, the office, the stairway and the entrance give one a wholesome feeling. You enter a mansion whose destiny is music. The director presented in recital a list of pupils, not all by any means, for the number is three times greater than the list.

Miss Marion Stavrosky can be detached from the group of vocalists. Her voice is an excellent mezzo-soprano and her singing of the aria from "Robert le Diable," by Meyerbeer, disclosed temperament. With zealous studies the young lady will be able to achieve the unusual.

Rosie Vivola, a young lady of seventeen, gave promise of becoming a good pianist. Already she possesses an excellent technic, good musical feeling and a distinct tone. With inclinations for interpretation, she will achieve the results she seeks in pursuance of a career. She played "Ballade in G Minor" (Chopin).

I can commend Wilbur Knight for his tasteful rendition of a work by Haendel, and "L'Orage," by Chopin.

The three above-mentioned pupils stood above the following: E. Willis Pritchard, pianist; Eugenia Chadwick, Henry Mershon, Ruth Rogers, Katherine Terhune, Theresa Shaffron, Margaret Hitch and Christine Demarest, vocalists. Under the expert guidance of their director, Ralfe Leech Sterner, and Mrs. Sterner, they will be able to advance their work to greater advantage. Both are capable instructors and worthy of the vocation they follow. It is not sufficient to be taught correctly, but it is inexorable for the pupil to follow the lines outlined theoretically and practically by their instructors. Ralfe Leech Sterner is an authority—one powerful reason for the pupil to be imbued with ambition. Perhaps in the near future I will be able to comment on all the above, but space does not now permit. In any event, the evening of September 25 was a pleasurable one, and I shall return to the beautiful and inspiring school located on a spot where nature has bestowed so much beauty.

Music at the Rialto

Mr. Riesenfeld lifted his baton on the evening of September 24 when Tannhauser "Overture" was rendered by his excellent body of musicians. The program was arranged for the week ending September 28 and consisted also of "The Tramp" by Trotere and sung by Greek Evans, baritone. Possessed of excellent material he only lacks the legato which is so essential to a genuine vocalist. In the lyric passages he was always preferred to the more dramatic phrases surging from his resonant voice. Mr. Depew played Giulmant's "Marche Religieuse" on the organ. Mr. Riesenfeld was much applauded in the performance of Tannhauser.

Will the Italian Symphony Come to America?

From very reliable sources we learn that the Italian Symphony of Rome, under Maestro Mollinari's leadership, will not come to America as contemplated. At the offices of the French American Association for musical art we were told that the rumor was unfounded. In any event it was not denied that the Italian musicians could not appear in New York before the end of October. And it would be piteous not to hear them as a comparison to our own symphonic organization.

Emmy Destinn Returns After Thrilling Experiences

The musical world of America welcomes the return to our shores of Emmy Destinnova, the great dramatic soprano. Her return on September 22 marks one more point towards a season which promises to eclipse the former ones. Mme. Destinn was interned by the Austrians whose hate towards the Czechs is a fact known before the dismembered monarchy plunged into the greatest and the bloodiest conflict of all times. She has been an invaluable aid for our Allies and one can say that even in the twentieth century miracles have still been possible. She looks well in spite of the hardships imposed by her enemies and felt quite happy to be back to the land of her former conquests. Mme. Destinn will uplift the prestige of the Metropolitan Opera House by several appearances, one in "La Gioconda" next season.

The Mysterious Departure of Raoul Vidas—Charles Wagner to Manage Him?

We have known of musicians and artists who departed for some destination, but they returned, always, to the land which pays the most money. At present no country pays as well as America. Some of the European artists have often inquired of the writer whether it would be advisable to leave the Continental Shores for the United States. My answer has always been uniform. America has its own artists and in abundance. Naturally the unusual is always welcome here. What puzzles me is the mysterious departure of Raoul Vidas, who from the inception met with a warm reception, especially from our most competent critics. He appeared practically with every symphonic body of America, an opportunity not often accorded a newcomer. The number of his recitals proved that the boy was in demand. Still with the unanimous approval of the press Raoul Vidas came unheralded and left without solving the mystery. He left for Paris, where he may by chance appear in recitals. Our periodicals have been mum about this affair. What are the real causes of his mysterious departure? I am convinced that he has no important European engagements. Is it the lack of social demonstrations which caused Raoul Vidas to be unnoticed while in America? The Music League of America has labored to make an unknown violinist the talk of the press. To be just, this agency has secured more engagements for Raoul Vidas than any other similar organization under the circumstances could have done for an unknown musician. I am informed from a reliable source that this Roumanian-French violinist will not return to America before the season of 1920-21 and I am also told that he is to come under the management of the formidable Charles L. Wagner, known as the manager of the "Big Seven." Well, perhaps, the gods will be more kind toward a violinist who chances to be a pupil of Berthellier and not of the too much heralded pedagogue Professor Auer.

Ernest Davis

The brilliant American tenor has to his credit ten appearances with the Stadium Symphony Orchestra, which include two performances as Radames in "Aida." Owing to his unusual successes of the summer season just elapsed, his popularity has grown to the extent that he has been secured for fifty concerts throughout the country, and by the time this appears in print he will be delighting his audiences. Just now he is the soloist at the Maine Festivals, appearing in two performances at Bangor and Portland in Verdi's "Requiem." He will also be the soloist on two occasions with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the same festival. He will also appear at Montgomery, Ala., in "Messiah"; at Delaware, Ohio, in the same Oratorio and at Akron, Ohio, in "Elijah." During the season he will appear at the Orchestra Hall of Chicago, at the Apollo Club of Minneapolis, Minn., and at Columbia University of New York.

Mana-Zucca

The compositions of Mana-Zucca are to be featured by prominent singers and instrumentalists. Mischa Elman, the violinist, will perform at his second New York recital her composition entitled "Novelette." Joseph Rosenblatt is expected to sing her new work "Rachem." No doubt about her growing popularity.

Music at Rivoli

The principal musical offering for the week ending September 28 was the "Dance of the Hours" from "La Gioconda" rendered by the orchestra under the direction of Erno Rapee. The latter gave ample proof that he is unacquainted with rhythm. The orchestra for the greater part played well except for the clarinetist, who indulged in incorrect emissions of his allotted part. There was some dancing with accompaniment of Liszt's "Liebestraum" and a duo of singers.

Pupil of Louis Simmions to Feature Roumanian Songs

Bernardo Olshansky, an artist pupil of Louis Simmions, besides a very interesting program of French, Italian, English and Russian songs, will feature for the first time in Aeolian Hall a group of Roumanian songs on October 7. This little Balkan state boasts of some very characteristic folk lore melodies, but very seldom has this music been heard in America. The only composer who is somewhat popular with the orchestral bodies is George Enescu, composer-violinist, but no other from Roumania has ever penetrated our concert halls. Mr. Olshansky is a basso cantante, of whom we have often spoken, and this novelty will not fail to impress his audiences, besides we will enjoy something different than hitherto presented. He will feature the songs in the original language, which will be quite intelligible to those acquainted with the Italian idiom, as the resemblance between the two languages is marked.

CLARENCE EDDY AT SIOUX CITY

After a career as a concert organist of nearly fifty years, Clarence Eddy, who appeared in an organ recital on the Hanford memorial organ at the First Baptist Church last night, appears to play with no less fire and enthusiasm, not to mention virtuosity, than has characterized his work through all the hundreds, nay thousands probably, of concerts that he has given. Not only is Mr. Eddy altogether the most widely known of organists in this country, but he is practically the only American organist who has gained laurels in all the countries of Europe. Every great exposition since Vienna in 1873 has featured him as its principal organ soloist, and his repertory comprises practically everything published for the organ as well as thousands of manuscripts that have been dedicated to him.

The program of last night was exceedingly attractive and arranged in a manner that produced a profound effect on the listener. The great "Prelude and Fugue" on B-A-C-H, attributed to the immortal Leipzig cantor, formed a fitting opening. This at once established a standard for the program. Two numbers by the French organist, Josef Bonnet, who appeared here last season, were especially effective, the dainty "Romance Without Words" and the "Caprice Heroique." Having heard both before, the audience was able to doubly appreciate them. "Hope," by Pietro Yon, a New York organist, was unique in its conception. "Evening Harmonies," by Sigfried Karg-Elert, was quite modernistic in its tendencies and thoroughly introspective in conception. The march by Stroughton, "Neptune," was a highly dramatic number, with a suggestion of storm and shipwreck. Other numbers deserving special mention were the "Scherzo Caprice," by Enrico Bossi; a "Concert Caprice," by George E. Turner, who is a resident of Iowa, being organist of a church at Waterloo, and Schminke's "Festal March," with which the recital closed.

Mr. Eddy's playing is specially characterized by sympathy and free use of all the tonal effects at his command. Despising the tricks commonly in use by many organ players, he foregoes the use of the crescendo pedal almost entirely, and mixes his tone colors freely by using the stops directly. The modern organ abounds in mechanical appliances, and the inefficient organist neglects the cultivation of a technique in the use of the stop knobs, finding it easier to avail himself of the numerous lavor-saving devices. These should take a lesson from the playing of the veteran.

It is to be regretted that so small a number availed themselves of the opportunity of hearing the recital last night. It is true that the season is very early, also that the concert was not widely advertised, and there was little solicitation for the sale of tickets. But it is time that Sioux City got out of its musical swaddling clothes and learned to stand on its own feet. If the name of Clarence Eddy alone is not sufficient to draw a good audience, it looks as though the community had not even yet grown to years of musical discretion.—Orwin Allison Morse in Sioux City Journal.

J. EDWIN PETERSON LEAVES THE FOURTH CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

After seven years of service as Director of Music at the Fourth Congregational Church, J. Edwin Peterson has left that position and will on next Sunday assume charge of the music at the Campbell Park Presbyterian.

On last Sunday evening a gala farewell program was given and Mr. Peterson must have felt elated not only at the beautiful singing done—indicative of his splendid work throughout the years, but also because of the feeling and expression of cordiality and good will as expressed repeatedly by the very sympathetic minister, Rev. Briggs, and also in the hearty "godspeed" given him by the congregation in general.

There were about thirty members in the choir loft and they were supported as well as a rather noisy, unmusical organ would permit by Martha P. Meier, who played accompaniments full of life and with some color.

Mr. Peterson is one of the most alert as well as properly reposeful directors this writer has ever seen before a church choir. He has musicianship and style and a fine knowledge of repertoire besides which his own big bass is sufficient to make up for the fact that there were but few others of the same voice in his choir.

Evidently Mr. Peterson has done the most faithful kind of work at this church and the younger singers there have "grown up" musically under his tutelege.

The result is artistic to the fullest possible degree and effective in a very exceptional way.

No church choir has ever, in my hearing, given out a bigger or better volume of tone pro rata.

There is a fine feeling for the religious, the poetical and the dramatic possibilities of the chosen numbers also and a sufficient quota of really good solo voices to take care of such obligato and incidental solo requirements as may arise, and these on Sunday evening were far from being a negligible quantity, considering the fact that the Inflammatus from Rossini's "Stabat Mater" was one of the numbers and it was given an exceedingly brilliant as well as correct reading.

There was not much interference with the music on last Sunday night by way of sermon, etc., and these items were made entirely in keeping with the occasion and therefore the event took on much the form of a sacred concert.

"By Babylon's Wave" (Gounod) was given a broad, dramatic reading, particularly with good soprano work. "Comes at Times a Stillness" (Woodward), sung with beautiful shading in all parts, "Jerusalem" (Gounod) done very brilliantly, and several other excellently sung anthems besides a good solo by Mr. Peterson and a duet in which he was artistically joined by Martha Meier.

The "Jerusalem" solo and the Inflammatus obligato were brilliantly done by Mrs. Emma Flumey.

EDNA WINIFRED COOKINGHAM RETURNS FROM SERVICE IN FRANCE

Edna Winifred Cookingham, one of the most popular of the younger set of pianists and teachers in Chicago, early heard the call to "Service in France," and, concluding that she could best serve as an entertainer with the Y. M. C. A. forces, she offered herself for the work, and, being accepted, unselfishly laid down her teaching and concert work in Chicago and went abroad to do what, and all, she could.

She has now returned to a big class at the American Conservatory and to again take up the directorship of her own School of Music out Irving Park way, but she is still full of the optimism and the enthusiasm born of France and her details of work and service there are interesting indeed.

"It is the most grateful work possible to imagine," she said, "and, although I have had almost every hardship and privation possible to crowd into ten months of actual work in the field, I yet have had a corresponding amount of compensation in the joy and the glory of the service itself."

The deprivations and the sorrows of the trip included the fact that even before her ship left New York harbor Miss Cookingham suffered the loss of her baggage, including a grip, in which she carried all her credentials, and it was only at the final moment that these were located.

In the excitement attending the search for her trunk Miss Cookingham fell down a hatchway in the ship and such was the shock and jar that she remained in bed during a greater part of the voyage.

"I was fortunate even at that," she smiled, "for a sailor who fell down the identical hatchway a day or two afterward broke two legs and an arm and was almost killed."

EDNA WINIFRED COOKINGHAM

In France Miss Cookingham was in a serious auto accident, and through bad traveling accommodations (sleeping where the rats ran over her, for instance) she contracted pneumonia, from which she nearly died in a Paris hospital.

But "the joys were equally great," she said, "for, while we found poor accommodations in many places (including some terrible pianos), we had splendid attention and privileges at other times.

"We lunched and dined with many fine people; we were privileged to dance with 'the boys' almost every night; we found immense appreciation of our music, and it was our further privilege to be of great help in many other ways."

Miss Cookingham has citations for excellent services from Col. David Stone and many other notables of the army.

"We always announced in our concerts where we were from," said Miss Cookingham, "and the mention of Chicago always brought me special appreciation and courtesy.

"In reciprocation, I can say that the American soldier (and he from Chicago very specifically) is the very finest in the world.

"In intelligence and valor, as well as in that sort of courtesy which would be appreciated by American girls in war work, the American soldier was superb."

NAMARA TO APPEAR AS "GUEST" WITH THE NEW ORLEANS OPERA COMPANY

Arrangements have just been concluded whereby Marguerite Namara, lyric soprano of the Chicago Opera Company, will appear in special "guest" performances with the French Opera Company in New Orleans under the direction of T. Verande. The popular prima donna is still a member of the Chicago Opera Company, and in addition to her operatic duties has many concert engagements to fill throughout the country. One of the most important of these is her appearance with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra at Carnegie Hall, New York, next February, when Namara will be one of only four vocal soloists engaged for the entire season.

DENVER, COLO.

By MRS. JAMES M. TRACY

Summer visitors to Denver and Colorado have reason to feel that, aside from the most wonderful scenery in the world, Denver has also furnished them with a great deal of entertainment of every degree. The musical contingent feels proud and satisfied that the inducement thrown out to the lover of the divine art has been of the highest and most artistic type. As a prelude to the summer musical season the MacDowell Pageant in June, given in the garden of Mrs. Walter Scott Cheesman, proved a brilliant opening from the standpoint of musical and financial worth, the latter to the extent of clearing $500. The Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam, done in dramatic cantata, with interpretative interludes, arranged and directed by Henry Houseley, with a splendidly trained chorus of 100 or more voices and quartet, was the special feature of the gorgeously arranged yet dignified carnival. The costumes were wonderfully attractive, and, together with the talent displayed, created a unique performance. Stage directors strive always for the most startling effects, yet when we viewed the background of tall poplars at the end of the beautiful garden, with the stage arranged directly under the moon and myriads of electric lights reflecting, caused us to remember that nature can produce what no human hands can. Mr. Houseley's choruses are always finely balanced and trained. The Saslavsky Trio Party, consisting of Alexander Saslavsky, violinist; Frederic Goerner, cellist, and Marie Sloss, pianist, commenced their series of six historical concerts July 11 in the Brown Palace Hotel ballroom. At the first concert the trio of Beethoven, E Flat, Op. 1, was given in memory of Joseph A. Thatcher, who was always a liberal patron of music in Denver. Nardini's Sonata in D, for violin and piano, was given, with Sonya Mitchell pianist, and this concert concluded with the Saint-Saens Trio in E Minor. At the second concert, July 18, the Mozart Trio, G Major, proved the most interesting, although Dvorak's Trio in E Minor is a special favorite of the writer. It is, as all this author's compositions, very original, always a reminder that Dvorak was greatly interested in and influenced by the southern Negro, for which purpose he went South. The composer shows throughout in his work that feeling of warmth and sentiment, yet he likes to bring in the Negro "shuffle" by way of spice and variety. Mr. Saslovsky seems especially adapted to chamber music. He makes every concert so attractive, so interpretative that, although such concerts are considered the most classical form of musical entertainment, yet the untrained music lover can enjoy and appreciate the beauties which are brought out by such artists as Saslavsky, his enthusiastic cellist, Goerner, and pianist, Miss Sloss. The Sonata in D of Brahms concluded this concert. Schubert's E Flat, Op. 100, Trio was the opening number of the third concert. What more appropriate could have been chosen on a midsummer July evening? Schubert, with his full and beautiful harmonies, such as only the inspired can produce. Even in his poverty his heart was light and happy, although his Andante movements are strangely sweet and sad. The Fantasie for violin and piano in sonata form by Schutt and the Duo of Beethoven for violin and cello made an attractive change on this program. Not strange that the last number was by request. Mr. Goerner has made himself a favorite in Denver. The tones of stringed instruments are so human, and especially so seems the cello. It always reminds me of two lovers, the cello with his masculine persuasion, and the violin so plaintive and feminine. Arensky's Trio in D Minor, Op. 32, is to the writer more musically intoxicating each successive time. It seems as if this composition brings out all and every varied mood that a human being is heir to. The perfect ensemble and rendition of this number by these sympathetic artists proved a fitting climax to an evening of unalloyed musical delight. At the fourth concert in August Mendelssohn's Trio in C Minor, Op. 66, was given for the first time. Who can listen to Mendelssohn's music and not be carried away by its harmonies, even if the rendition is less perfect? Cesar Franck's Sonata and the Trio in C Minor by Chopin, also given for the first time in Denver, closed the evening, until the fifth concert, when an entire Brahms program was given, including the Trio in B, Op. 8, Sonata in A, violin and piano, and Trio C Minor, Op. 101. Miss Sloss has a warm spot in the writer's heart for the reason that she is one of the few pianists who plays with rhythm, accent, musical feeling, combined with rare technic. It is very seldom that we hear all these qualities at one time. Frankly speaking, it is painful to a great many of us to listen to the average pianist play. To be sure, technic is often displayed, but what enjoyment is there in listening to a machine? Granted that technic creates a foundation, but give me the pianist with a heart and soul, a feeling that expresses something. Brahms in all his various moods was well brought out, reflecting creditably upon the unity of purpose and feeling of the artists. At the last concert of this series Lella Cole Lof was the pianist, and a Trio in C Minor by a Denver composer, Zdenko von Dworyak, was given, also Tschaikowsky's A Minor, in memory of Mrs. A. E. Reynolds; Beethoven's Trio No. 3, and Cesar Franck's Sonata, A Major. By general request an extra song and sonata recital was given, with Agnes Clark Glaister, soprano, August 22, and Heniot Levy, pianist, August 29. While not belonging to the regular series, yet they were a brilliant climax to an extraordinary summer musical treat. We are glad to note that this trio party have become a permanent fixture of Denver's summer musical life, although the series for next summer is really to be in the fall from September 2 to October 7, inclusive. Referring to the last concert, the writer was especially pleased with the Sonata C Minor, for violin and piano, composed and played by Heniot Levy, the pianist of the evening. It was evident that Mr. Levy felt most at ease in that part of the program. There was an apparent lack of sufficient rehearsal in the Kreutzer Sonata, although this was less marked in the Brahms A Major, which concluded the program. The Saslavsky Trio have furnished all the music at the Boulder Chautauqua this season. Several times Mabel Nash Roesch, the popular soprano, was the soloist, and at Colorado Springs they also gave a series of six concerts. At the City Auditorium Larry Whipp, the well-known organist, gave daily noonday concerts throughout the summer. However, a few weeks since he resigned, and Henry Houseley has taken his place. Henry Sachs directed the city band at City Park the past summer, and large numbers of residents and tourists flocked there every evening. While many of us have deplored the fact that Denver does not possess a symphony orchestra, it is a great solace and pleasure to go to the Rivoli Theater and hear the Cavallo Orchestra of forty men. It brings back to memory the years past when Cavallo did so much musical good in giving the music lovers of Denver an opportunity to hear the old and modern suites and symphonic works. There are many in Denver today who would not know how to enjoy or appreciate a symphony had it not been for the education they received from hearing the Cavallo Symphony Orchestra week after week. Looking around over the 5,000 or more people that the present orchestra plays for daily, it is plainly evident that they are really going to hear the music because they love it, and they are becoming more enlightened as to what good music is. Loella Roeschie, the popular organist at the Ogden Theater, and Ruth Skelly, violinist, continue to draw large crowds. It is very evident that this attractive theater is patronized by the best class of people, not in its particular locality alone, but from all parts of the city. Its large seating capacity is taxed to its utmost at every performance. Mrs. James M. Tracy was the hostess at a large reception and musical August 19, complimentary to her sister, Mrs. Dr. J. Adolf Riedel from Chicago. The program was given by Florence Lamont Abramonitz and Ferne Whiteman Smith, vocalists; Irene Hubbell and Mrs. Tracy, pianists. A. M. Oberfelder has advertised an attractive series of ten concerts at the Auditorium, beginning in October. The musical Society of Denver will begin their season's work in October with a musical "frolic." Many pleasing surprises have been planned for this occasion. Prosperity for musicians and teachers alike is apparent on every hand, and as to the musical "good things" in the way of high-class concerts we always have a great number of them, and from all accounts the season of 1919 and 1920 will cap the climax of them all.

ORATORIO SOCIETY OF NEW YORK

The Oratorio Society of New York, Walter Damrosch conductor, announces and has in active preparation a gala performance of Handel's "Messiah," to be given at Carnegie Hall on Tuesday evening, December 30. The accompanying body will be the augmented orchestra of the Symphony Society of New York.

Among the soloists are Emma Roberts, American contralto, and Morgan Kingston, tenor, of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

With these world-famous soloists, the society's augmented chorus of 500, and the New York Symphony Orchestra, it will be the endeavor of Walter Damrosch to give a "Messiah" performance not only of the highest order of artistic excellence, but one sensational in its character.

A Spring Festival

The Oratorio Society of New York, Walter Damrosch conductor, announces that it will give an elaborate festival of music in the spring of 1920 instead of the usual concerts scattered throughout the season. Six gala concerts will be presented beginning April 6, and from the present indications this festival of music promises to be one of the greatest musical events ever held in the United States.

It will take place in the 71st Regiment Armory, Park avenue and Thirty-fourth street, the interior construction of which is being arranged to seat 5,000 persons. A special stage and sounding board is also being built.

From outlying parts of Greater New York there will be assembled a huge chorus which will bring the society's choral force up to 1,200 voices. There will be a children's chorus of 600 and an orchestra of 150—the augmented orchestra of the Symphony Society of New York.

The entire musical direction will be in the hands of Walter Damrosch.

The festival will include a Rachmaninoff evening, in honor of the great Russian composer, pianist and conductor. This concert is of special importance in view of the fact that Mr. Rachmaninoff will not only play one of his own piano concertos, but will himself conduct two important choral and symphonic works, one of which will receive its first performance in America. This will be not only Mr. Rachmaninoff's last appearance as pianist, but his only appearance as conductor.

Such great choral works as Mendelssohn's "Elijah," Berlioz's "Damnation of Faust" and Edgar Stillman Kelley's "Pilgrim's Progress" will figure prominently in the series. World-famous soloists, such as Mabel Garrison, Frieda Hempel, Florence Easton, Marie Sundelius, Sophie Braslau, Julia Claussen, Merle Alcock, Charles Hackett, Edward Johnson, Lambert Murphy, Reinald Werrenrath, Emilio de Gogorza, Louis Graveure, Royal Dadmun, and Charles T. Tittman will be heard in the various solo parts.

A special program has been arranged, in which Jascha Heifetz and Pablo Casals will play the Brahms double concerto for violin and cello.

Mme. Luisa Tettrazzini will sing at the closing concert and other special features will be announced later.

BIANCA RANDALL

Miss Bianca Randall was a pupil of Jean de Reszke, in Paris. She has also spent several years in Milan, and her appearances in European centers won her much favorable comment from the newspaper critics. Her voice is a fresh soprano of beautiful quality, employed with skill and intelligence, while her interpretation of works of a noble dramatic form and those of a lighter vein is equally pleasing. Combined with vocal gifts, Miss Randall has a charming personality, which always helps to win her success.

Her repertoire includes French and Italian Opera, French, Italian, German and English songs.

A unique and appealing feature of her work is her costume recital, which includes scenes from the operas in the traditional costumes.

PASSING COMMENT

It might seem that the question of street car fares had not much to do with music, but such is not the case.

On the contrary, it is a very serious question, for every person coming downtown to take a music lesson this season is paying seven or eight cents for each ride, instead of five, as formerly, and everyone going to a concert is subject to the same exorbitant rate.

To some people this does not make any difference, but to many others it is vital, and in some cases it amounts to so great a burden that lessons are discontinued and concert-going is abridged.

In New York, recently, the writer was surprised to find that all street car, elevated and subway fares are still five cents. Talking to a New Yorker about this, he said, "Well, you see, the franchises of all the New York lines forbid a greater charge than five cents."

"And so do they in Chicago," I replied.

"Then why do you submit to the raise?" he asked.

Echo answers, "Why do we?"

Mayor Thompson has been accused of several unpretty things, but we certainly have to thank him for the fact that he closed the saloons on Sundays, and kept them closed.

Now, if he will but keep to his intention of forcing a return to five cent street car and elevated fares, he will have our further admiration and thanks.

Philadelphia is crying aloud for the completion of its Million Dollar Symphony Orchestra Endowment Fund, and says, in a pamphlet being widely distributed, that the Philadelphia Orchestra, as a high-grade institution, will cease to exist unless this fund is raised.

Half was pledged before the war, and therefore only half a million is now wanted.

A mere bagatelle, as it were!

The pamphlet referred to states other interesting facts, among them the expressed views of E. T. Stotesbury, a millionaire of Philadelphia, as follows:

> "Again and again music has refreshed me when I was dog-tired; taken me out of myself and away from the problems of business."
> Charles M. Schwab

"A man who hears good music, whether at the opera, a concert or an orchestral performance, will find himself afterward rested and refreshed in a way which he cannot otherwise attain."

This same circular proceeds as follows:

"It's in the air to give money to music," says the New York Times.

Mr. Julliard leaves millions for music.

Mr. Eastman, of Rochester, follows with three and a half millions for a school of music and a symphony orchestra.

Detroit is finishing an $800,000 auditorium for its orchestra, to be followed by a two-million-dollar building later.

The business clubs of St. Louis have bought up the tickets for the entire season of its orchestra.

Cleveland is raising a large guarantee fund for its orchestra.

Never before in the history of music in America has so much money been given for its advancement.

Everybody is musical, or anxious to be. The war has brought about a musical time in our lives. It has shown us, as nothing else could have shown us, that music is a force and not an aside in our lives. It gave life to our troops—it sent our boys singing "over the top."

Music is certainly "in the air"—in the hearts of people as never before.

But how much "in the air" is it in Philadelphia, with its foremost orchestra in the United States?

And—we may ask also—"How much is it in the air in Chicago?"

You have heard me speak before of "Constructive Criticism," and wonder how any newspaper could possibly submit to having its paid critic use its columns merely for the purpose of expressing personal likes and dislikes, and as has often been the case in Chicago, as a medium for flip, slangy and empty smartness.

Well—W. L. Hubbard has come back to town, as you know already, and the very first criticism he wrote for the Tribune happened to be one about a local organization which makes no pretense of being other than what it really is—a sort of sublimated community institution, devoted to presenting music of a kind and in a way to reach the masses.

Mr. Hubbard's writing about this organization is what I call "Constructive Criticism," as well as decidedly interesting reading, and it is here reproduced in full, with the expressed hope that it is but the forerunner of much more of the same kind of critical writing.

The Edison Symphony Orchestra inaugurated its fifth season of concerts in Orchestra Hall last evening before an audience which filled the auditorium and received with hearty approval all that was offered. The eight numbers which formed the program were virtually doubled, for encores were insistently demanded and willingly given, and Mr. Eastman and his players had no reason to doubt that they were among friends.

That this orchestra of a hundred men has made a place for itself and is filling a need in the musical life of Chicago are facts which it would seem useless to deny even were the inclination toward such denial existent. That the artistic work is not of the finish and perfection of that of the foremost symphonic orchestras of the country, and that it probably never will be, in nowise alters the facts. The conditions under which the orchestra was formed and under which it operates, the employing of men who are artisans more or less skilled in lines of work wholly apart from music, the purpose and scope of the rehearsing and of the public performances—all these justify the applying of standards different from those applied to the regular symphonic orchestras. These men play as a pleasure, as a means of education to themselves, as a source of gratification to that inner demand for an expression other than that which their daily employment affords. Such players are amateurs in the true and actual meaning of that word. They are lovers of music, and of such no country can have too many. Such musicians make for genuine actual music culture in the nation, and only encouragement of the sincerest kind should be accorded them and their every endeavor, no matter what the artistic reach of their achievement may be.

But a program played as Mr. Eastman and his men played the one of last night has in itself a worth which commands respect and commendation. Slips in technical finish, deviations from pitch, want of unity in interpretative accomplishment—these are occasional blemishes which only the fussily critical will dwell upon or find reprehensible. To harp on these is to lose sight of the big thing in the work, the real values and the vital worth that is there. It is cause for wonderment and admiration that a hundred men of all kinds of trade and profession can in four weeks with one rehearsal a week bring their performance to such smoothness, unanimity and satisfying musical beauty as did these last evening under Mr. Eastman's gracious, skilled, positive leadership. It shows what can be done when the true love and the real music spirit are the motive powers, and so splendid is the result that one could but wish that the generosity and enterprise which makes the establishing and maintaining of such an organization possible could but go a step farther and enable its members to have double the number of rehearsals now had.

The more ambitious selections on the program last night were a liberal excerpt from "Lohengrin," surprisingly well played; Glazounow's "Autumn and Winter," the lullaby from "Joselyn," and the Mendelssohn "Spring Song," all of them so presented that they delighted the audience and gave cause for sincere commendation by those who wished to apply standards of music values rather than of mere enjoyment to what was accomplished.

In the course of an interview in Musical America, Pietro Yon, the distinguished organist, has this to say:

The free organ recital is like any free recital—bad. I cannot condemn it too strongly. It is bad for the public and bad for the organist, and it has been so widely practiced in America—it is not so in other countries—that the public has almost lost its respect for an organ recital. I ask you: Why should an organ recital be free? The fact that many of them have been given in churches to which an admission fee was not permissible may explain it in part. But that must be done away with. The concert organist is an artist as is the concert pianist, violinist, cellist or singer. Are there free song recitals? And if there are, who goes to them?

And all this is merely an indorsement of the "Nothing for Nothing" propaganda, and a verification of the fact that The Public Rates Every Artist at His Own Valuation—If He Plays for Nothing, the Public Considers Him Worth Just That—No More, No Less—Nothing.

The infallible Tribune had an article on the front page one day last week in which reference was made to Cleon Fonte Campanini.

The Pacific Coast Musical Review tells of a beautiful program booklet used by Farrar in her San Francisco concert "containing the original texts and translations of all songs given by Miss Farrar."

We remember that once last winter Mr. Wagner, manager of John McCormack, made the statement that words of songs were never used on the McCormack program under any circumstance.

But, then, McCormack has impeccable enunciation and pronunciation!

A large advertisement in one of the Eastern music magazines, devoted to Nina Tarasova, is divided in exactly two halves. In the first half there are some quotations from the daily press proving that Tarasova is "An Artistic Success."

The other half of the space is devoted to a facsimile of the box office report showing that the receipts of the Tarasova concert in New York in September reached the enormous total of $3,187.00.

And who shall say which is the best advertising or which part of the ad proves better the greatness of Tarasova.

Would Patti have been Patti, had she not made so much money?

We do not believe so, and are insistent in our thought that money values are of much more consequence than most musicians are willing to admit. Again comes to mind the thought: The Public appraises a musician at his own valuation.

If at any time he accepts Nothing as his fee, he is promptly rated at that figure—Nothing.

If he is paid well for his work, the Public gauges and applauds accordingly.

SEDER PLAYS IN EVANSTON

ERNEST DAVIS

An artist of whom every American should be proud is Ernest Davis, tenor—American born and bred, and educated wholly in America, as well.

Mr. Davis sang last week at the Maine Festivals, and there scored so pronounced a success as to make certain his position as one of the leading tenors of the country.

This success follows two years' residence in New York (where he went from Chicago), during which he has appeared in a great number of fine events in the metropolis, and has also made splendidly successful concert appearances in all parts of the country.

During the summer he proved to be one of the most popular of all the New York artists appearing at the great Stadium, and his work in concert, opera and oratorio has proven equally valuable.

His voice is robust, in the fullest sense of the word, and yet it possesses the finest sort of quality as well, and whatever he does is filled with true musical feeling and fine intelligence.

His repertoire has grown to be a very large, as well as splendidly varied one, and in his interpretations he shows, invariably, thought and musicianship, as well as a very correct feeling for poetical values.

The name of Ernest Davis has already become a synonym for artistry and pleasure giving throughout a large part of the country, and it will become more and more so as the months go on, for he is a tireless worker, and to all his other gifts and attainments there may be added the fact that he is the possessor of a most agreeable personality, and to see and hear him once is to remain a friend to him ever afterward.

WYONETA CLEVELAND PLAYS BEFORE THE DAUGHTERS OF INDIANA

On last Tuesday afternoon, at the Congress Hotel, Miss Wyoneta Cleveland was the soloist for a meeting of the Daughters of Indiana, and such was the beauty of her selections and the quality of her pianism and her art as to win unqualified admiration.

Miss Cleveland is a charming girl, and she is a remarkably gifted as well as superbly trained player, and her work at this time proved her to be constantly growing toward that extremely high ideal which she has, very evidently, placed before herself.

Her numbers on Tuesday, played with brilliance and fine musical qualities, were Tarantelle (Lizst), Prelude (Mendelssohn), and Etude in E Flat (Lizst).

YVETTE GUILBERT'S SCHOOL OF THE THEATER

Mlle. Guilbert Defines Her Plans

Throughout my life all my work, my study, and my affections have been focused on the art of the theater. Animated with the hope of aiding others who, too, are vitally interested in this supreme art, I am opening a school of the theater.

The fundamental idea of my school is the close interpenetration of all the arts. This theory will be carried into practice by thorough training in ALL the related arts of the theater as a foundation for the mastery of ONE.

The stage has its actors, singers, dancers, painters, sculptors, decorators, who can contribute nothing really worth while to the art of the theater if they are untutored in any other arts save their own, and are thus unable to merge their efforts in a perfectly balanced whole. Supreme artistic achievement presupposes the blending of all arts into one perfection. A great singer is only a mediocre artist if he has not mastered dramatic expression, plastique, the rhythms of the body. Speech, quite as much as song, has its melodic line. The body has its own language and expression. The singer who cannot mime, the actress without vocal beauty, are not, in any high sense, artists. So, too, a great dancer must be also a comedienne, a tragedienne, able to express all emotions through the medium of plastic expression, colored by body movements. Thus from masterly techique in all the related arts, each especial art will flower, complete, perfected, radiantly alive.

But to attain this supreme development in stage art, scientific and intellectual effort must conjoin, and all spiritual, critical, philosophical faculties be developed in delicate accord, because the interpretative artist should be the mental equal of the creative. This is, of course, the ideal condition, and if it cannot always be mantained it can always be approached.

The interpretative artist, particularly the actor, must also be trained to comprehend the intellectual processes of the dramatist, because their art is a mutual one. Lacking the rudiments of such training, how can he divine and body forth the mighty protagonists of Sophocles, Euripides, Shakespeare, Moliere, Racine, Tolstoi, Ibsen? Moreover, to convey atmosphere, to give the tang of time and place to his presentments, the actor must know the architecture, the dress, the customs and manners of the epoch in which the characters lived.

Our course aims to instruct in all these vital details as well as to give broad technical training in dramatic, lyric, mimetic and dance expression. This technical training will be supplemented throughout each year by special courses in the crafts of the theater, conducted in the workshops of the Neighborhood Playhouse.

When the students are ready for public performances they will be given an opportunity to participate in my recitals or play in productions at the Neighborhood Playhouse, where their actual stage experience will be gained under the combined direction of the Playhouse staff and myself.

As another phase of its interest the school wishes to bring together all those who care profoundly for noble intellectual stimulus and enjoyment. So through frequent social gatherings our students will be brought into gracious and friendly relations with the literary and artistic world, that the school may be the meeting place for a congenial brotherhood of the arts.

YVETTE GUILBERT.

SHORT PEDAGOGICAL COURSE By Effa Ellis Perfield

In the advertisement on page 31 of last issue of Music News an error was made in that the words "Bugle, Dictation, Part Singing, Ear Feeling and Rote Song" should have been bracketed in such a way as to stand opposite the major word "Singing" only, as follows:

SINGING
- BUGLE
- DICTATION (MELODIC AND HARMONIC)
- PART SINGING
- EAR FEELING
- ROTE SONG.

SISTINE CHAPEL SOLOISTS

Surely, Wessels and Voegeli could have no cause for dissatisfaction at the splendid audience which came to Orchestra Hall last Sunday afternoon, and in wishing them a continuance of that favor for the whole season Music News could do no more.

Every seat was taken in the hall proper and there were just as many crowded on the platform as it was possible to put there and still leave room for the four singers from the Sistine Chapel who formed the reason for this big outpouring at the beginning of the season.

This audience was largely one interested in the churchly aspect of the event rather than in its musical significance, and it is because of this fact that one hesitates to express any critical opinion of the concert.

However—the quartet was presented as a concert attraction and must be looked at from that standpoint regardless of other considerations.

The four singers (men) comprised soprano, alto, tenor and bass, and they appeared in the first half of the afternoon in the vestments of the church.

The fact of the vestments was more or less distasteful as an adjunct to the concert stage—many people question its good taste—and, further—no real American could ever understand why any man would be willing to renounce his masculinity to the extent of becoming a soprano or alto even in the service of the church.

And—truth to tell—the quality of these unnatural voices was not nearly so pleasing as would have been the real soprano or alto of a woman.

However—leaving these points entirely out of the question, it must be said at once that the quality of the musicianship offered was superb and the program a charming as well as a beautiful one albeit preponderantly ecclesiastical.

Of the sacred songs "O Sanctum convivium" (Perosi) seemed to me the most beautiful, and it was, as presented at this time, a piece of high art in phrasing, tonal quality and musical color. The other churchly numbers were by Iommelli (1714-1774), Vittoria (1540-1605), Iannacconi (1741-1816), and Cappocci. In my opinion these would have been more effective sung in one or two groups instead of singly, with the necessitated walking back and forth to the front of the stage.

The last half of the program (sung in evening clothes), in which, by the way, the four singers looked exceptionally elegant, included a charming Madrigale of Palestrina, and delightful works of Antolisei, Lasso and Marchetti as well as "Il ritorno del gregge" (Muller), which was, undoubtedly, the most popular gem of the collection, and in which some wonderful sheepbell effects were simulated by the voices.

The entire program was, of course—in Italian—though one says "of course" merely out of habit, for should any American choir or quartet elect to give a concert in Rome it is a well-known truism that the English language would not there be accepted and the singers would be compelled to learn Italian whether they wished or no.

Penn—"The Magic of Your Eyes" (Penn) was a popular number on the program given by Elsa Lyons Cook at Briarcliff Manor, N. Y., last week.

AUDITORIUM CONSERVATORY

Karl B. Stein, president, takes pleasure in announcing the engagement of Mr. Georges Pierkot as director of the violin department. Mr. Pierkot is a Belgian by birth, a graduate of the Royal Conservatory of Brussels, a man of most pleasing personality, splendid attainments and years of successful experience in both concert and teaching. He is first violinist of the Chicago Grand Opera Orchestra and will begin his duties at the conservatory at once.

Mrs. Lela Lowe Pierson, a young violinist, who has studied with the best teachers in Chicago and New York, and who has been a popular concert artist of the Redpath Lyceum for a number of years, has also been added to the faculty of the violin department. This makes the department one of the strongest in the city.

Mrs. Ella Snell Gara, well known in musical circles and long established as a successful teacher and artistic pianist, who received her training from the late Emil Liebling and Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler, is one of the new faculty members.

Miss Hazel Quirk, a brilliant young pianist, a graduate of the Teachers' Course of the conservatory, who has proved herself an unusually capable instructor, will be a member of the faculty of the piano department.

Miss Janet Havens, Mrs. Stein's assistant, in charge of the junior dramatic work, will begin her classes for children October 11. Miss Havens is not only an exceptionally talented and finished reader, but she has a most winning personality and has proved herself especially adapted to teach little folks, who gain much pleasure and profit from her classes. Playlets and easy dances will be arranged and given on the regular school recitals.

Mr. William Schwartz, tenor, pupil of Mr. Stein's, and Gaetano Viviano, baritone, are singing operatic selections at the Hippodrome this week.

Pupils of Mr. and Mrs. Stein seem to be in great demand as entertainers.

Ralph Brainerd, one of the leading tenors in the All-American Grand Opera Company, New York, stopped in Chicago on his way to New York from a summer concert trip to see his former teacher, Karl Buren Stein.

Miss Cora Lindemann, mezzo-soprano, an advanced student of Karl B. Stein, is booked for concert dates in Lake Forest, North Chicago, Waukegan and Kenosha during the month of November.

Janet Havens, reader; Gladys Grove, soprano; Ruth Helene Dahly, contralto; Beatrice Nutter, mezzo-soprano, and Hazel Quirk, pianist, will fill their third engagement at Great Lakes Friday evening.

Ruth Helene Dahly, artist pupil of Karl B. Stein, was soloist at the Home Chapter of the Eastern Star meeting for the grand worthy matron, filling her third engagement.

Miss Dahly and William Schwartz, tenor, also pupils of Mr. Stein, will sing their second concert at the Pilgrim Congregational Church October 26. Miss Dahly, Mr. Schwartz, and Miss Kartak, an advanced pupil of Mr. Stein, will sing groups of songs for the Kenrose Women's Club in October, November and December.

Adele Okoneski, pupil of Mme. Phasey, director of the dancing department of the conservatory, has begun a thirty weeks' engagement as solo dancer with Dale Booker Ballet. Mary Mathurin goes to New York next week to fill a similar engagement.

Martha Anderson, soprano; Sigurd Tronsen, tenor, and Helga Anderson, reader, pupils of Ruth Helene Dahly, gave a program at the Bethel Lutheran Church Monday evening.

Presented by the EFFA ELLIS PEDAGOGY of INNER-FEELING—REASONING—and DRILLS through EAR—EYE—and TOUCH. This Course contains forty-five songs—words and music by Effa Ellis Perfield.

The SONGS are composed with the idea of stressing strict form, poetically and rhythmically. The THOUGHT in each song is based on a characteristic of the Bird, Animal, or Flower. There are no melismatic notes — each verse scans PERFECTLY, and the melodies follow the "tune" of the speaking voice.

The STORIES about the BIRDS are presented in a manner which gives the child a chance to express his "previous knowledge." The PICTURES of the BIRDS and FLOWERS appeal to the child's love for colors.

JOSEF KONECNY

The Konecny Concert Company returned from France on the U. S. S. Transport Mobile, landing at New York on September 3, after an exceptionally calm voyage. On board were parts of the famous First Division. The company appeared three times for the officers and men on the trip. The four months' tour in France was a most wonderful trip, from every standpoint, and they gave a total of ninety concerts and appeared in the following regions: Paris, Brest, Nevers, Montierchaume, Gievres, Is-Sur-lle, Verneuil, Bourges, Tours, Langres.

They also made three trips to the battlefields—two to Reims, including a visit to Fort La Pompelle and surrounding battlefields; also Chateau Thierry and Belleau Woods, and the American cemetery there, where lie buried about 2,400 American heroes, and one to the Soissons region, including the famous Chemin des Dames, near Anizy-Pinon.

Mr. Konecny writes that it is beyond the power of any human being to adequately describe these devastated regions. They will forever remain a monument to German "kultur." It is to be hoped that as many people as is possible may view these vast graveyards, where the bones of millions of men lie buried, for it is an object lesson that can never be obliterated from the memory.

"I cannot speak too highly of the magnificent spirit of the French people, who are bearing up splendidly in spite of the terrific loss in man power and property. One cannot help but admire them."

The fall tour opens October 16th in the East, and the management has booked four weeks of splendid recitals, including the University of Virginia, the Virginia Military Institute, the State Normal College of Virginia, the Shenandoah Collegiate Institue, the Eastern College at Manassas, the Randolph-Macon Institute, the Lynchburg College, etc.

Mr. Konecny has received the following testimonial letter from Thomas S. McLane, Chairman Overseas Entertainment of the Overseas Theater League, under whose auspices he toured in France:

"My dear Mr. Konecny: We cannot allow your period of service to terminate without a word from this office in appreciation of the splendid work you did abroad.

"The reports from our Paris office have been most flattering, and I can assure you it is with sincere appreciation of all that you did that I beg to send you, therefore, this word of thanks."

Sincerely yours,
THOMAS S. McLANE,
Chairman Overseas Entertainment.

CHICAGO PIANO COLLEGE

The first of the Saturday afternoon concerts for the season at the Chicago Piano College was given on October 4, when the following attractive program was well presented:

Pasquinade .....Gottschalk-Joseffy
Mrs. Mary Dietz
Deep River.....Trans. by Coleridge-Taylor
Miss Helen Moskowitz

Arthur Lang
Orchestral parts to concerto played on second piano by Harmon H. Watt.

AT THE PLAYHOUSE

"I tell you it is absolutely impossible." Thus spoke a man in my hearing as he was leaving the Playhouse last Saturday evening with his friends.

"Well, of course," replied one of them, "It is only symbolic or allegorical, whatever you like to call it, but nevertheless it certainly makes you think."

"That may all be," said the first man, "but I still contend that the whole thing is impossible."

. . . .

Of course they were discussing "The Miracle Man," which likewise is a very general topic of conversation throughout Chicago.

For not only is it a wonderfully prepared and a beautiful picture but also, in its motif and mood, it is amazing and when you see it you are swayed emotionally whether you wish or no and also you simply have to think.

At the Playhouse it is environed and saturated with beautifully appropriate music.

The Orchestra and Organ emphasize and support its every moment and, perhaps unconsciously on the part of the audience, this factor becomes one of the very real reasons for the positive absorption of every audience (there are crowds continually), in the picture.

LORRAINE EARNEST AT THE GREAT NORTHERN

The Great Northern Hippodrome vaudeville is to be commended very heartily on the fact that each week there is one really good, serious, high-grade music number on the program.

Many young singers and players of Chicago have appeared there in the past few years and many have gained there both routine and reputation.

During the past week Lorraine Earnest, a young pupil of Leon Sametini at the Chicago Musical College, has been the attraction and a hearing given her toward the latter part of the week was a joy indeed.

Miss Earnest is a very beautiful girl—with long curls—the kind our grandmothers used to tell of but which few girls today know anything about, and she also has a most winning smile, one indeed which will certainly prove an asset to her throughout her public career.

And she is wonderfully talented. But in spite of these lavish gifts of Nature she is just a sweet-natured, unaffected little girl and knows full well that whatever she does now is merely in the line of foundation-building for that fine superstructure of music which she is building day by day.

For of a truth, Lorraine is a builder indeed and few girls of her age would work so patiently or so persistently as does she.

And in spite of her youth, these qualities have told already in no uncertain way and her work at the Hippodrome was that not only of an exceptionally talented young violinist, but also it had a great deal of the finish and the art of the mature concert player.

Miss Earnest has a tone which is at once dainty to the fullest extent of the word but which also, and happily, is full of vitality and life.

So true in intonation is she that it would seem impossible for her ever to play off key and this purity of tone is amplified in her case with body, quality and beauty.

The writer has heard her play some of the great classic masterworks and knows her technical and intellectual powers for these to be abundant. But at the Hippodrome she played, naturally, only works of brilliant or sentimental content such as the "Scene de Ballet" (De Beriot), "Loin du Bal" (Gillet) and "Obertass" (Wieniawski.)

LORRAINE EARNEST

These, however, she invested with that grace of tone mentioned above and also tossed them off with a transcendency of technic which made them sparkle like the delicate spray from a fountain rising into the sunlight.

The audience at the Hippodrome was highly appreciative and evidently knew that the treat being presented was a rare one and I am sure that this audience joined with me both in admiration for the grace and daintiness of the girl herself and also in the exquisite quality of her playing.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY

The opening recital of the season was given by Mae Doelling, who is without question one of the most brilliant pianists in Chicago. Her playing evinces great originality, coupled with authority, and also combines the two qualities of positive assurance and feminine reserve. All these qualities were well brought out in the course of her program, which was chosen with interesting skill. The Beethoven which opened the program was full of authority and appreciation of its classic lines. The Chopin group was Chopin at his best as interpreted at the hands of one who possessed a deep understanding of him.

The third group, which included the Debussy "Reverie," "Jeu d'eau" (Ravel), "Humoresque" (Godowsky), "Polka" (Rachmaninoff), and Carpenter's "Polonaise Americaine" was a group of splendidly chosen and gratefully varied numbers, which gave the artist ample opportunity to give her versatile nature expression.

A group of Liszt numbers, closing with the Thirteenth Rhapsodie, brought the program to a conclusion and left for the whole a lasting impression on a very enthusiastic audience.

BARTON BACHMANN

Barton Bachmann of the faculty of the Chicago Musical College, is beginning the season with a promising class of students and an already enviable list of concert engagements. As evidence of this he played a concert last Friday at the Lake Forest Woman's Club and on the same day participated in a joint program with Rosemary Pfaff at the Edgewater Club.

Mr. Bachmann is not only a talented pianist but a composer of rare gifts as well, and we look forward to further splendid work from his pen.

A PUPIL OF ESTHER HARRIS SCORES SUCCESS

Miltona Moore, a talented pupil of Esther Harris, Chicago, gave a club musical at Joliet, Ill., September 7.

The Joliet Evening Herald-News speaks in most flattering terms of the work of this young lady (sixteen years old), who played with power, style and finish and gave unlimited pleasure to the large audience present to hear her.

Miss Moore is a long time pupil of Esther Harris, president of the Chicago College of Music.

Miss Moore played solo numbers by Bach, Chopin, Moszkowski, Grieg, MacDowell, Wollenhaupt, Sinding, and Collins as well as a dainty little piece of her own—Prelude—which created much enthusiasm.

She played also the "Polacca-Brilliante" of Weber-Liszt and the "Concertstueck" (Weber), with Edward Collins of Chicago at the second piano.

Kraft—Arthur Kraft, who went to New York for coaching and to fill professional engagements after his discharge from service, has returned to Chicago and has here resumed his former positions and will also be very prominent in the concerts of this season.

DR. HEMINGTON RESUMES ORGAN RECITALS AT EPIPHANY CHURCH

For many years Dr. Francis Hemington has been giving organ recitals at Epiphany Church and countless hundreds (yes, thousands) have sat under the spell of his intelligent musicianship and his finished art.

For—Dr. Hemington is a player whose technic can be expressed in only one word—transcendental, and whose art is also all-encompassing in so far as organ repertoire, ancient and modern, is concerned.

There was a goodly audience on last Sunday night at the inaugural concert of this season and—as these programs will be given on the first Sunday night of each month throughout the winter, it is safe to predict that many new admirers of the Hemington art will be made and that all the old ones will be on hand again so soon as they have sensed the fact that the series has really begun.

There was no sermon—and very little of hymn singing, but one cannot forbear to mention again the wonderful power and skill of Dr. Hemington in his congregational accompanying.

During the two or three opening verses of any familiar hymn he plays "straight" and simply leads the people to correct and hearty singing.

But along about the fourth verse, after the congregation is well accustomed to the tune, he turns himself loose with a flood of pedal counterpoint and a wealth of added harmonies which are simply amazing.

If some of these improvisations could be caught and printed for permanancy they would constitute concert fantasies of wealth and merit.

The program proper included a remarkably brilliant reading of the Toccata and Fugue in D Minor (Bach), a well-written "Evening Song" (Bairstow), and the rugged, stormy and emotional, but—at the end, victorious "Finlandia" of Sibelius for the first group.

The second was all American, I think, and it was played superbly.

It included "Melody" (Mentor Cross), dedicated to Dr. Hemington; "March of the Gnomes" (Stoughton), "An Autumn Sketch" (Brewer), and "Caprice de Concert" (J. Stuart Archer).

The assisting vocalist was Mrs. Laura O'Sullivan, whose very attractive voice and fine musicianship were displayed to advantage in "How Lovely Are Thy Dwellings" (Liddle).

Mrs. O'Sullivan is a singer of much charm and finish, and her work at this church has always been received with acclaim.

MLLE. BRARD IN PIANO RECITAL

Mlle. Magdeleine Brard, the remarkable young French pianist, who, after a recital at Aeolian Hall and a later concert appearance at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York last season, established herself as more than a musical prodigy, will inaugurate her first extended American tour at Aeolian Hall, New York, next Saturday evening (October 11), under the auspices of the French American Association for Musical Art, which represents the Ministre des Beaux Arts of Paris in presenting representative French musical artists in this country.

This young artist is but sixteen years of age. She made her debut with the Paris Symphony Orchestra at the age of fourteen, after having won the Prix d'Honneur at this noted institution, which was the highest honor it could confer upon a student, and followed a group of previous artistic triumphs which had been officially recognized. Her first appearance in the United States was last season, when she was the soloist with the Paris Symphony Orchestra under Andre Messager, followed by her own recital and concert appearances in this city.

Her recital Saturday evening will be her only appearance this year in New York, as a tour of more than 100 cities has been arranged for her in recitals and solo appearances with noted orchestras.

Her program for her recital will include the following:

Theme and Variations.....Glazounow
Impromptu ..... Chopin
Etude ..... Chopin
Deux Preludes .....
Ballade .....
Ballet Alceste .....Saint-Saens
Sospiro .....Liszt
Eleventh Rhapsodie .....Liszt

RICHARD HAGEMAN AND HIS PUPILS

Richard Hageman, one of the best known grand opera conductors and coaches in America, is this week opening his new studio at 309 West Eighty-fifth street, New York. Here he will continue the coaching that has brought such notable results to his pupils.

On his recommendation Ruth Miller was engaged by the Society of American Singers for leading roles, and with her Dorothy Francis. A third one of his pupils accepted by this organization is Kathleen Southerlin, who has also secured entrance into the Ravinia Opera Company, of which Mr. Hageman is conductor. The maestro's recommendation also gained a Ravinia engagement for Charles Mareau. One of Mr. Hageman's best known pupils is the Japanese girl, Hara Onuki, equally able in the roles of Yum-Yum and Butterfly. Marion Chapin is another young woman who has been assisted to engagements by Mr. Hageman, who brought her to the attention of the Springfield Festival, which also engaged the Metropolitan Opera's orchestra. Similarly Blanche Consolvo was engaged for the festival at Norfolk, Va., to sing with the Metropolitan Orchestra under Mr. Hageman's direction. Many other pupils of his have obtained engagements in churches. Much of his time is occupied with coaching singers of already established reputation.

KATHERINE CLARKE

"The most satisfactory summer of my life," was the enthusiastic answer Miss Clarke of Wisconsin Conservatory in Milwaukee made to an inquiry regarding her summer vacation, and she went on: "It was also full of the very hardest work I've ever done. I was so delighted to find Mr. Herbert Witherspoon's work was so like my own I feel satisfied to go on with new and increased interest."

Renewing a number of past experiences with fads and methods, she laughingly remarked: "Goodness yes, I studied all sorts of methods with all the supposedly best teachers year after year from the very beginning of my career and the experience was good, although from a financial stand I spent dollars, quantities of them, I can never get back, but I learned to tell very quickly in the latter years when there was something I really wanted and I have for a long time been using what I may, I suppose, call my own method, for although it was the simple natural thing it gradually came to me out of the many experiences I went through.

"The very first lecture I heard Mr. Witherspoon give in Chicago this summer satisfied me I was on the right track and I know I have been able to get my better and quicker results with young voices through this work."

Miss Clarke related many details of her career of teaching and I am not going to say how many years she has been at it because I found it hard to believe. She has all the spirit and effervescence of one just beginning their career.

Her work has not all been teaching, for since she first began, a mere slip of a girl, to sing she has been the best known of Milwaukee's contraltos and her appearances in Milwaukee have been always successful as well as very numerous. Outside engagements also as numerous as she could spare the time for. Her appearances in Milwaukee include three "Messiahs" with Arion Club, concerts with Milwaukee Music Society and Chicago Symphony Orchestra, A Capella Choir and her last big appearance was with the A Capellas at Auditorium in 1913, and then she says: "I was too busy to do it; I have a gift for teaching and the two afternoons a week I planned to keep for myself for personal work are usually crowded now with extra lessons and I barely have time for my church work, so I gradually gave up extensive concert singing."

She has at different periods been soloist at First Baptist Church, Calvary Presbyterian, Immanuel Presbyterian, St. John's Cathedral and at present keeps her position of many years' standing at Temple Emmanuel.

Miss Clarke and her sisters have made up a family quartet which has been a long-standing pleasure to themselves and their friends, and yet with all the music they surround themselves with they have many outside interests.

Miss Clarke's "all-roundedness" shows in the work her pupils do. She has an eye for personality and told me she tried to develop individuality and inculcate poise and she succeeds, from what I've seen and heard, far beyond the average. For the past six years she has spent one day a week at Racine at St. Catherine's Academy and this summer after close of Mr. Witherspoon's term she taught a class of Sisters from all over the country, who were attending summer school at the Academy.

Among her pupils occupying prominent positions we find Verna Lean, contralto, on faculty of Wisconsin Conservatory in Milwaukee, and Carroll College, Waukesha; Clementine Malek, soprano, of Wisconsin Conservatory, Milwaukee, and Grafton Hall, Fond du Lac; Mrs. Lillian Dobrinski Mattern of Wisconsin Conservatory and fifteen pupils in prominent church positions. A record any one could well be proud of, but it was all extracted as facts from Miss Clarke in a bright, crisp businesslike way and it took a lot of questions, for she is the most modest successful person I have ever met.

CLARICE BALAS' SUMMER HOME

Clarice Balas, to whom Mr. Henri Rabaud wrote, after hearing her play in Boston, "Tous mes compliments a la brilliante pianiste, Mlle. Clarice Balas," has booked several orchestral engagements for the coming season and is anticipating an extended western tour. She is still at her summer home in North Olmsted, Ohio, where her chief occupation is the superintending of a Victory Garden and three incubator chicks. The pet rooster "Bolshevik," may be seen in the snapshot, which was lately received by the chronicler.

Miss Balas has named her summer home "Valkyr Lodge" because of her deep admiration for the heroine, Brunnhilde, and the fact that critics called Miss Balas a Brunnhilde at the piano. She writes that the trees, with their early autumn foliage, are beautiful, and expresses the wish that she might drive the writer out to see the georgeous scenery. Regret is only to be expressed that there is little hope of the fulfillment of our desire at this season, but we hope that at some future time we may have the privilege of visiting the talented pianist in her delightful summer home.

MARIE SIDENIUS ZENDT

(Taken from Life Sketches of Swedish People in Illinois.)

Mme. Zendt is a well known and highly appreciated singer. She was born at Vislanda Smaland, Sweden, where her father, D. G. Sidenius, was inspector of a saw mill by the inland Lake Bolmen. The Sidenius family, who originally came from Jemtland, Sweden, were always great lovers of music and possessed of musical qualities in a marked degree. Her mother, Betty Pauline (nee Ibsen), descends from the noble family of Count Wedel of Denmark, and also from that side she inherits her musical gifts. Mrs. Zendt is a worthy descendant from these families and has for years shown her ability as a lyric soprano singer of exceptional power.

At the age of three she came with her parents to the United States, settling in Elgin, Ill. At the age of sixteen she was a member of the Universalist Church quartette. Under the able tutorship of such masters as A. Garrett, Karleton Hackett and Herbert Witherspoon she has gradually risen to the prominence in the musical world she enjoys today.

With ambitious and strenuous work, coupled with a most pleasing personality and intelligence, she undoubtedly will soon rank among the foremost singers of our time.

AMERICAN SYNCOPATED ORCHESTRA AND SINGERS

Two races have contributed to the lore of American music—the aboriginal Indian and the transplanted African, or Southern negro. Only since the war has the effect which the traditions of the colored race have imparted to Western music been fully appreciated by the world at large. This has been due largely to the wide acclaim with which the melodies and darky harmonies of our colored troops overseas have been received.

What Cadman has done toward preserving the feeling of the red man in musical composition, Will Marion Cook—doubtless the foremost musician of his race—has accomplished in catching and adapting the rich harmonies of the colored folk. Few programs of contemporary American or European artists but include one or more of these remarkably colorful interpretations of negro life.

Cook will himself conduct during the tour of the American Syncopated Orchestra and Singers.

GILDEROY SCOTT

On October 15 Mme. Gilderoy Scott will be special soloist at the Fullerton Avenue Presbyterian Church, singing "O Rest in the Lord" (Mendelssohn), "Sheep and Lambs" (Homer) and "I Will Give You Rest" (Cowen).

On October 17 she sings before the Chicago Ethical Society at the City Club, using Mme. Violet Holmes Tidy's "Life Journey" and other numbers.

November 6 she gives a recital, assisted by Ethel Murray, cellist, at the Recital Hall, New First Congregational Church, Ashland avenue.

November 16 Mme. Gilderoy Scott sings with the Detroit Symphony Orchestra in Detroit, when she will present the Elgar "Sea Pictures" and "My Heart Is Weary" (Goring Thomas).

It is a pleasure to attend these well-prepared and artistically planned demonstrations.

NEWMAN'S TRAVEL TALKS

"Alsace Lorraine," the travel talk with which E. M. Newman starts his annual season at Orchestra Hall, is a living epigraph of the "Vive la France" of today. Newman spent five months abroad, arriving in Alsace Lorraine immediately following the signing of the armistice, and has returned with the pictures and story for those who could not travel of the delivery of a people "out of bondage." In a remarkable group of motion pictures and color views you will visit Metz, Colmar, Mulhouse, Thann and many quaint, picturesque villages. In the public square in Srassbourg you will look upon these simple, fearless people celebrating the longed-for redemption. One curious scene in motion is of families of storks living in chimney pots—a visual linking up of the old days of Hans Andersen and Grimm with the modern world and its strange complexities. "Alsace Lorraine" has spelled "homesick" for millions of Frenchmen for half a century. When the Germans took Alsace Lorraine they forbade the teaching of French. An old school teacher, fearful and yet brave, at once wrote the fateful words "Vive la France" and whispered to the little tots, "Do not forget, my children." Yesterday these children, grown through the weary years to manhood, stood at Verdun and taught the world what the heart could do in silence through love of home. In this travel talk one can realize that the delivery of Alsace Lorraine is the great epic of the war.

A NEW BALLET

"Boudour," the new ballet pantomime by Felix Borowski, the Chicago composer and critic, is now being rehearsed daily on the stage of the Auditorium by Andreas Pavley and Serge Oukrainsky, Premiers Danseur Etoiles, their assisting artists, and the Opera corps de ballet. At the same time orchestra rehearsals are being conducted by Mr. Borowski himself.

For the role of "Boudour," the wife of the Oriental caliph, whose sultry passions are the cause of tragedy and frenzied jealousy, a young American artist has been chosen. Her name is Pearl Lloyd, and she has been given the role because of her great gift for pantomime. The list of characters also includes Andreas Pavley, as the slave; Serge Oukrainsky in the double role of Master Demon and Caliph; Mandane (Boudour's rival), Mlle. Ludmila; and the slave dancers, Mlles. Ledowa, Shermont, Arnold and Nemeroff.

A suite of the ballet had its first presentation in musical form on February 14-15, when it was played by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. It was divided into four parts: First—the Prelude; second—March, Dance of the Slaves, and Mandane's Dance; third—Love Scene and Dance of the Infernal Spirits; fourth—Bacchanale. The music proved to be half Slavonic, in keeping with the composer, who is himself of Slavonic descent. At the same time the music is half Oriental, in keeping with the Persian character of the setting. The ballet is not altogether dancing. A large amount of it is pantomime.

The subject of Felix Borowski's ballet-pantomime, "Boudour," is concerned with the passions of the woman whose name forms the title of the work. Having bestowed her love upon one of the favorite slaves of the caliph, her husband, she eventually tires of him and gives her heart to Astyage, the youngest brother of the caliph. Boudour plans to remove her husband and to put her lover in his place. To do this she enlists the aid of the infernal powers, who give her a subtle poison. The rejected slave, Sahadie, learns of the plot to kill the caliph by poisoning his wine and when the latter, in the midst of the festivities of his court, is about to drink from the poisoned goblet, Sahadie casts the cup from his master's hand. Seized for this apparent insult by the guards, the slave confesses his love for Boudour and the plot to kill the caliph. Realizing that all is over Boudour, to prove her innocence, drinks from the poisoned flagon and her husband, now convinced that the slave has lied, kills him. The festivities proceed, but the revelers have drunk of the cup of death and one by one they fall.

Norman-Bel Geddes is now busy arranging the scenery, costumes and properties. In a recent interview Geddes said he was planning many new stage effects, as the music is highly colored and emotional and the Oriental Persian setting superbly rich in its possibilities.

Campanini—A wireless has come from Maestro Campanini that his steamer, the Dante Allighieri, was delayed at the Azores on account of lack of coal. But the maestro expects to reach New York positively on October 3. With him are Rosa Raisa, Giacomo Rimini, Alessandro Dolci, and Teofilo de Angelis, the new Italian conductor from the Costanzi, Rome.

A DISTINGUISHED MUSICAL GROUP

In this group may be seen Modest Altschuler and his Russian Symphony Orchestra, with Mischa Levitzki (soloist), Miss Barondess and Miss Holt (pupils of Samoiloff), and (in the front row, with Palm Beach suit) the New York vocal teacher and coach, Lazar Samoiloff.

JACOB MOERSCHEL

If you have met Jacob Moerschel, pianist-teacher, of Milwaukee, the name is enough for a heading and also, paradoxically, nothing, because no headline could begin to describe all the things you found when you met the man, especially if on one of the occasions you had been (called for promptly at 7:55 p. m.) taken into his home one lovely spring night, into a real make-yourself-one-of-us homes—big spaces, comfortable chairs, radiating hospitality, and a small, congenial set of people, who grew congenial in more than the one thing as the evening wore on, for Mr. Moerschel is many-sided and a good conversationalist, and not all the time was given to the informal music program.

Jacob Moerschel is a pianist and teacher, though it is only as a teacher I am here considering him, and what has been recorded in my mind of his teaching makes one rejoice that, however great may have been the promise of his career as a performer, he gave up the steady pursuit of that to follow teaching. Not having traveled down the ages, there is no chance to use superlatives, but speculatively on a not too limited experience I would be willing to lay what Jacob Moerschel put before me against any equal number of selected pupils of any teacher and expect a very favorable verdict for my display.

Mr. Moerschel, in the few times I had met him prior to the evening in question, talked in very general terms of music and musicians. He did not allude to methods, and it was from hearsay I had gleaned this resourceful teacher had prepared very thoroughly in America before spending ten years abroad. Mr. Moerschel is probably more influenced personally by Leschetizky than by any other single pedagog, but his system or method is more elastic or embracing, for no two of his pupils show the same "ear-marks."

In inviting me to his home, he said: "I'll have a few of my pupils play for you, since you desire to hear them. I will pick out some of the best. I don't want you to be bored."

It was the one thing above all others I did desire, for in a few casual meetings Mr. Moerschel had presented so many sides I was quite unable to file him in any pigeonhole, and, frankly, I was curious.

In person, Jacob Moerschel is a big, healthy, well-groomed human being, moves with the nervous energy of an American business man and dresses with the same lack of eccentricity. He talks rapidly and always to the point, is extremely courteous, and at the same time has a brusque sense of humor that is particularly magnetic with young people. He is well posted, has very quick perception, is capable of an enormous amount of work and is rather exacting of same in others, I would say.

Right here I should put in a subhead—Atmosphere—for it was what I experienced. It was a musical evening in a sense, but so much more than music occurred that I could hardly believe it when I checked up that record that it all happened in one evening. The four pupils Mr. Moerschel selected to play were Raymond Dettlaff, a

Quite a program, most anyone will agree. And such variety of interpretation and style—no imitation, no expression of stultifying method applied by rule and precept. Four distinct types and talents; a quality, not polish, but finish—that breathed relaxation born of interest and concentration. Not in one instance was there any self-consciousness apparent.

Young Dettlaff took to the Bach Fugues as he would to baseball and kites. He had found something in Bach, and those agile, small fingers followed a mental admonition, and the result was an intelligent weaving of voices which made one sigh with contentment. If it wasn't head, it was some instinct the small tad possessed that many would-be players of Bach to auditors regretting their dollars might well cultivate, and there was better Bach to come from Mr. Rehorst, a depth in his Bach playing that belonged on even older shoulders by rights. The maturer playing of Mr. Rehorst and Miss Wilkin displayed power and brilliance. Mr. Rehorst is endowed with a goodly supply of temperament or an intelligence that simulates it very strongly. Miss Wilkin had been heard before, to excellent advantage, so her scintillating performance of pianistic pyrotechnics was not a new experience. Whatever it is, you know she is going to do it, and well.

Mr. Rusch also had been heard before in some excellent playing of the ultra moderns, and his own compositions showing the same leaning, his poetic Schumann and electric Chopin were as startling and as delightful as had been Mr. Rehorst's breathless tempo of the E flat Waltz. It was original and wholly satisfactory. These two chaps reach the ultra moderns by entirely different routes, and are equally pleasing and vitally interesting.

Mr. Moerschel does not speak in extreme terms of any of his talent. He frankly says, "Here are four, taken from a group of what I consider my good material."

That "Water finds its level" perhaps explains why or how this teacher draws more than the average amount of worthwhile material, or perhaps it is his individualistic way of developing or interesting what comes to him. He is no easy taskmaster, but he has a rare gift for teaching, and when the evening I had purposely and insistently prolonged beyond the boundaries of politeness came to an end, I said to myself, "It would be worth most any sacrifice to study with Jacob Moerschel, just to be in such an atmosphere more frequently." It brought a restfulness—as an aftermath the satisfaction of having spent several unusually happy, congenial hours, where sincere purpose pervaded. If there were more such teachers and more of such "evenings," "Atmosphere," that alluring spirit of the Old World, would not be mong the unknown virtues of our own America.

THEODORE HARRISON

Just as we were congratulating ourselves that the first issue of the Publicity Month had gone through without error we were confronted with the fact that there were two errors and that, by a strange perversity of fate, the two of them referred to one artist—in this case, Theodore Harrison, who has lately become associated with the Lyceum Arts Conservatory and whose reputation as a singer and one of the finest of vocal teachers in the United States has already brought him a splendid class of young artist pupils in Chicago.

The first of these mistakes was in Mr. Harrison's regular advertisement, and the second was in the caption under his picture in the article devoted to the activities of the Chicago Mendelssohn Club.

Mr. Harrison sang here some years ago with the Apollo Club and made so profound an impression that, as soon as it was discovered that he was available for this year, the Mendelssohn Club engaged him for their most important concert.

Mr. Harrison will fill many other prominent engagements during the season and will be very much in the public mind continually through the work of his artist pupils.

Mr. Simmions will also, after October 1, resume his activities at the Merrill School, of Mammerneck, N. Y., where, as in the previous seasons, he has taught from sixty to seventy-five pupils belonging to the privileged classes.

Mr. Simmions wishes to announce that he has secured two associates and one to instruct the special branches of musical art.

Max Kramm, who has, as usual, a fine piano class at his studios in Kimball Hall, is receiving congratulations on the fact that his artist pupil, Aeolia Martin, was awarded first place in the young artists' piano contest at Lockport, N. Y., last month.

Inasmuch as this contest was open to every young pianist in the United States and also because every teacher of the country was privileged to enter his pupils, the honor, both to Miss Martin and to Mr. Kramm, is a very definite one.

Last year at the same event, the National American Music Festival (Lockport), Miss Jessie Comlossy, another artist pupil of Mr. Kramm who had previously appeared successfully twice in Chicago recitals, was heard and she, too, scored a pronounced success.

VERNESS FRASER

Verness Fraser is one of the most gifted of the younger generation of Chicago pianists. As a performer, of unusual temperament, of remarkable brilliancy and high interpretative gifts, she has gained steadily increasing successes on the concert platform and in club and home circles. Miss Fraser is also very much in demand as an accompanist, having had to fill numerous dates with artists of prominence during the last season.

Possessing an attractive personality, Miss Fraser enjoys the distinction of being equally efficient in the art of elocution and expression. Her achievements in that direction have been brought forward on an extended Chautauqua tour, covering all the western states.

Miss Fraser has received her musical training almost exclusively from Walter Knupfer and is a member of the faculty of the Knupfer studios.

SCHOOL MUSIC

By LYRAVINE VOTAW

The Chicago High School Music teachers met recently for their first gathering of the season. Election of officers resulted in placing Mrs. Dora G. Smith of the Lake View High School as president; Eleanor Sweitzer as secretary. Steps were take at this meeting to affiliate this organization with the National High School Teachers' Federation, believing that "in union there is strength."

A choral organization composed of teachers from our city schools who love to sing, with O. E. Robinson as their director, will hold the first rhearsal of the Teachers' Chorus the middle of October. Miss Matilda Krimmel is president.

The National Conference of Music Supervisors, which has for several years held its annual gathering in cities of the middle west, announces its 1920 meeting to be held in Philadelphia, March 22-26. Our eastern friends have been urgently inviting us to their land for some time and we shall be glad to join them and also to visit their schools. If we plan far enough ahead and not too many strikes intervene between now and then, we hope we can go in large numbers.

The officers are: President, Mr. Hollis Daun, Ithaca, N. Y.; First Vice-President, Mr. Frank A. Beach, Emporia, Kan.; Second Vice-President, Mr. Peter W. Dykema, Madison, Wis.; Secretary, Miss Elizabeth Pratt, St. Louis, Mo.; Treasurer, Mr. James McIlroy, Mt. Oliver Station, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Auditor, Mr. Walter Butterfield, Providence, R. I.

Board of Directors: Miss Alice C. Inskeep, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, Chairman; Mr. Karl W. Gehrkens, Oberlin, Ohio; Mr. John W. Beattie, Grand Rapids, Mich.; Mr. Glenn H. Woods, Oakland, Cal.; Miss Effie E. Harmon, South Bend, Ind.; Mr. Osbourne McConathy, Evanston, Ill. (ex-officio.)

The link between the National Music Supervisors' Conference and the Music Teachers' National Association is becoming stronger each year, as each year each organization realizes more fully the importance of the work being done by the sister organization. Close co-operation is resulting in the broader musical education of the young people of America.

The Music Teachers' National Association also holds its gathering this year in Philadelphia, but in the winter, December 29-30-31, whereas the Supervisors meet in the early spring. The M. T. N. A. has on its program many of our prominent school music teachers, some of them being: Will Earhart, Pittsburgh; C. H. Miller, Rochester, N. Y.; Karl W. Gehrkens of Oberlin, and Charles H. Farnsworth of Teachers' College, New York. J. Lawrence Erb of the University of Illinois fills an important place upon the program, giving an address upon "Affiliation" and he is chairman at an informal dinner where short talks will be given by members and friends.

Our state is proud of the place Mr. Erb is taking in the advancement of music.

A GROUP OF SUCCESSFUL YOUNG MUSICIANS

The following interesting group was taken at one of the Saturday musicales given during the season at the lovely summer home of Harriet Ware and shows, taken from right to left, Frank La Forge, distinguished pianist, coach and accompanist, guest of honor; Jeanne Sensency, director of music at Wilson College, Pa. (pupil of Miss Ware); Charles Carver, the phenomenal basso, who is both protege and pupil of Frank La Forge, and who, with Mario Rubinoff, tenor (another La Forge pupil), gave a fine program of the La Forge songs, with the composer at the piano. Florence Macbeth is next, and she also sang delightfully some of the La Forge songs. Then follow Mabel Lewis and Minnie Kalbach (Ware pupils), and at the extreme left is Mr. Rubinoff.

THE ORCHARD SCHOOL OF MUSIC AND EXPRESSION

The Orchard School announces removal to 5228 Harper avenue, which has been remodeled as a permanent home for the school.

Situated on one of Hyde Park's best residence streets, within one block of surface and Illinois Central lines; easily accessible from Hyde Park and Kenwood public and private schools and the University of Chicago, the location is ideal.

Mrs. Orchard, Olene Wallis-Lorish and Lavinia Bohrer are entering on the sixth year of their work in the piano department of the school. During the past five years they have become vital factors in the musical life of Chicago.

Ethel Lenore Clifford, pianist, has become a member of the faculty this season.

William Clifford, tenor, who has charge of the voice department, is soloist at the Union Church, Hinsdale.

Mr. Albert Osborn, violinist and successful teacher, will be at the Orchard School while in Chicago. Mr. Osborn is well know abroad.

Jessie De Vore, violinist, has returned from seven months' work for the A. E. F. in England, Belgium, Holland and France, and will be warmly welcomed by her friends and pupils of the school. Mrs. De Vore was honored in many ways while in Europe, and received very favorable press notices.

Bertha Iles, vice-president of the Chicago School of Dramatic Art, 633 Fine Arts Building, and director-manager of the Children's Hour and of the Drama League Friday evening programs at Municipal Pier, will be the director of the dramatic department.

Marie Veatch, one of Chicago's most intelligent teachers of dancing, a pupil of Chalif, Vestoff, Serova, Pavley and Castle, will have a studio especially fitted for her use at the Orchard School.

Competent instructors on string and brass band instruments will be affiliated with the school.

Brard—Mlle. Magdeleine Brard, the remarkable young French pianist, who made her first American appearance last season as soloist with the Paris Conservatoire Orchestra under Andre Messager, will appear in a piano recital at Aeolian Hall Saturday evening, October 11.

A FINE MUSICALE

A few friends of Mme. Gilderoy Scott and Mme. Violet Holmes Tidy were invited to the home of the former one evening last week and there ensued an impromptu musicale of great charm and sterling quality.

Mme. Tidy, as Chicago is rapidly learning, is an English Composer who spent a great deal of time in Paris and while there issued a number of songs.

She was the studio accompanist for Frank King Clark for several years and was herself a student of both piano and vocal art.

She considers herself essentially English, however, and does not wish to be known as a French Composer, although many of her songs have French texts.

Mme. Tidy is a long time friend of Mme. Gilderoy Scott and since she has located in Chicago these two have formed an artistic alliance which promises fine things.

Mme. Tidy has written a "Cycle of Life," which fits the Gilderoy Scott voice and temperament to perfection, and to hear these two talented women present this work is a joy indeed.

The composition is not of excessive length and yet it is distinctly a "big" number—one indeed which would, naturally and by right, take the place of honor in any program in which it might be included.

The text is beautiful and covers a wide gamut of thought and Mme. Tidy has shown exceptional skill as well as profound inspiration in her applying of music to this verse.

As in all her songs, so far heard, the piano accompaniment is exceptional in every respect, not the least of these being its absolute fitting in with the voice line (no, not all accompaniments do that by any means).

The vocal line is throughout beautiful as well as logical and the melody, ever present, is charming, while the harmonic structure is not alone full and solid, but is graceful, suave and brilliant by turns and the embellishment of mood and color is perfect.

A great number is this, as given by Mme. Scott and Mme. Tidy and one which will bring both these artists much acclaim whenever they use it on their programs.

Mme. Tidy is a remarkable accompanist and Mme. Scott has, as Chicago has learned to know, not only a superb voice but also dependable and beautiful musicianship.

There was other good music during the evening. Charles Lagourgue, virtuoso of the clarinet and flute (as well as abundantly gifted and schooled in many other items), played some obligatos as but few could do and George Lane, a young English bass-baritone, sang some old-time songs in a way to prove immediately that he is a splendid addition to the Chicago musical forces and that his inclusion in many of our best musical schemes will be a matter of awaiting only a little more introduction.

And last, but not least, Clarence Eidam, one of Chicago's dependable as well as entirely intelligent and artistic pianists, played a little group in his own clean, clear and crisp way, showing true feeling in a Schumann melody piece and much facility in a Chopin Waltz.

FINE COURSES AT WORCESTER

Four concert series are before the music lovers of this city; the Annual Musical Festival, 61st year, October 6-10; five concerts and six public rehearsals; the Ellis Course, four concerts; the Steinert series of five concerts, and the Worcester Symphony Orchestra, Daniel Silvester conductor, with two symphony concerts and a series of popular concerts with local soloists and choral societies as program givers.

The programs of the Musical Festival were printed in Music News last week.

Steinert course offers these attractions: First concert Tuesday evening, October 28, at 8:15; Charles Hackett (Worcester's favorite son); November 6, New York Philharmonic Orchestra, Joseph Stransky, director, with Percy Grainger, piano soloist; January 13, Mme. Matzenauer, dramatic contralto, and Paul Althouse, tenor; March 18, Jascha Heifetz, violinist; March 30, Mme. Carolina Lazzari, contralto, and Rudolph Ganz, Swiss pianist.

The Ellis course presents Arthur Hackett, tenor; Geraldine Farrar, Fritz Kreisler, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Rachmaninoff.

The Worcester Symphony Orchestra concert in Mechanic's Hall December 5 will have as soloist Florence Hinkle, whose name should now be written, I believe, Mrs. Herbert Witherspoon; the second symphony concert soloist for February 10 is not announced.

The Vatican Singers of Rome gave a concert in Mechanic's Hall Monday night, September 29.

THE PRESS AT LARGE

In this division of Music News there will be printed, week by week, comments on various concerts and artists which have appeared in the daily and weekly press of the country. This is done in the belief that this matter will be found to be of great interest to a large number of people. This is in no sense an advertising department, and no items will be accepted for pay

"Listen Lester"

The management of "Listen Lester," at the Illinois, errs in its advertised belief that the Tribune spoke of that entertainment as "musical comedy at its best." The Tribune said that a fragment of the show—a number lasting five or six minutes—was musical comedy at its best, but its reporter found much of it dull and vulgar and most of it musical comedy at its worst.—Percy Hammond in the Chicago Tribune.

Chicago Leads New York in Operatic Enterprise

Chicago's appreciation of her musical institutions and her pride in them suffer no marked diminution because of the tone of the New York press in commenting upon the forthcoming season of the Chicago Opera Company at the Lexington Theater in that city next January. Without exception the writers note the unquestioned superiority in musical interest of the repertory of our organization as compared with that of the Metropolitan Company.

Mr. Gatti-Casazza has announced as novelties Henry Hadley's "A Night of Cleopatra," founded on the Gautier tale; Albert Wolff's setting of Maeterlinck's "Blue Bird," Tschaikowsky's "Eugene Onegin," and Leoncavallo's "Zaza." These are the only new works promised, although a revival of Halevy's "The Jewess," and of "Parsifal" sung in English are listed as worthy of special attention.

The Gotham critics compare this list with the following from the Chicago Company's prospectus: "Rip Van Winkle," by De Koven and Mackaye; Prokofieff's "The Love for the Three Oranges," both of which have been especially written under commission from Mr. Campanini; Montemezzi's "The Ship," founded on the D'Annunzio play; Ravel's "The Spanish Hour," which last summer made so pronounced a success in London; Erlanger's "Aphrodite," Marinuzzi's "Jacquerie," Messager's "Mme. Chrysanthemum," the three one act operas by Puccini which the New Yorkers heard last season, and two ballets, "The Birthday of the Infanta," by John Alden Carpenter, and "Boudour," by Felix Borowski.

To this list of absolute novelties are added several revivals, among which is "The Jewess" and a number of works of larger interest than the Metropolitan Company announces.

Chicago has come to be proud of what its operatic organization offers and accomplishes, and not without reason. It is essentially alive and awake. It has in its management and its achievement much of that spirit which made the seasons directed by the late Oscar Hammerstein so vital in the history of opera in this country, and a source of such annoyance to the Metropolitan Opera Company. Mr. Campanini learned well the lesson of the years he spent with Hammerstein, and Chicago primarily, and now an ever widening section of the United States is reaping the benefits.—W. L. Hubbard in Chicago Tribune.

Hallet Gilberte

Camden, Sept. 6.—Hallet Gilberte's fame as a musician and composer of songs and ballads is secure and the fact that he is a native of Maine is especially pleasing to the citizens of the Pine Tree State. Mr. Gilberte has a summer home at Lincolnville Beach, and has spent his summers here for many years.

Here at Melody Manse overlooking the Penobscot Bay and in the shadow of the Camden hills many of Mr. Gilberte's songs are written. Here he finds opportunity to indulge in his love of the great out-of-doors and who shall say what inspiration comes to him as he roams afield or rolls along the highways and byways of Knox and Waldo in his big green touring car.

His friends are legion and the latch string is always out at Melody Manse for summer celebrities or fellow townsmen. In fact democracy is one of the outstanding characteristics of the Gilbertes (for there is a Mrs. Gilberte, herself being an accomplished musician) and they enter the social and business life of the community, giving freely of their time and talent for all worthy causes.

In appearance Gilberte is the typical artist; of medium size and graceful carriage, his tapering fingers and glorious mass of wavy hair with just a suggestion of gray instinctively proclaim the master of music.

Born in Winthrop, Me., March 14, 1872, he early showed an interest in all things musical. His mother, Lizzie Daly, an opera contralto, taught him the rudiments of music and his active career began as a pupil of Herman Kotzschmar in Portland. He studied the piano under John Orth and Carl Baerman; voice with Signor Rotoli, Charles R. Adams, Caroline Gardner Clarke, Mme. Grace Van Dusen; and composition with Ethelbert Nevin.

He moved to New York in 1906 and studied the piano with Joseffy and voice with Mme. Luisa Cappiani. Gilberte has toured the country as a pianist, appearing at the World's Fair on Maine Day and has also appeared as a concert tenor, but of recent years has devoted his time to singing his own songs in recital and touring the country with artists who are featuring his songs, with him at the piano.

Over 250 songs have originated from his fertile brain, of which some 60 have been published. Among his best known songs are "Two Roses," "Ah, Love, But a Day," "Spring Serenade," "A Mother's Cradle Song," "Youth Forever and a Day," "Moonlight-Starlight," "A Dusky Lullaby," "Minuet La Phyllis" and "The Devil's Love Song," all deservedly popular. They are widely known and widely sung by leading artists the length and breadth of the continent and thousands of Americans pay tribute to the Music Master of Melody Manse.—Portland (Me.) Sunday Telegram.

Children's Vested Choir

One of the attractive musical organizations of Maywood is the vested choir of the Presbyterian Church, organized by Mrs. W. J. Wallingsford. It is composed of about fifteen young girls of the Sunday school and since its inception has been doing singing of a high order. A new anthem every Sunday is the record so far and the children sing with a natural sweetness and abandon that is characteristic of the training of the directress, Mrs. Laura O'Sullivan, who is a cultured musician and experienced singer. She studied with the late L. G. Gottschalk, also Frank B. Webster and Dr. Francis Hemington. She maintains a studio in Oak Park for the training of children and young girls.—Maywood Press.

Ernest Davis at Bangor

The appearance of Alda, which was enough alone for any one concert program, was only a part of the richness and abundance which Director Chapman had provided for the patrons of the Friday night concert at the Auditorium. Another star, and the word is used in no idle way, was presented in the person of Ernest Davis, who sang for his programed number "Celeste Aida," from the opera "Aida," by Verdi, in which he scored a rousing ovation. He responded with three encore numbers, of which the audience seemed to never grow weary.

Davis has a beautiful voice and thrilling range and sings with rare charm and genuine interpretation. His stage presence is commanding and he has a magnificent voice under perfect control and sings with the most excellent taste and great ability.

While Davis seems fitted for operatic work both by the tonal qualities of his voice and the lyric dramatic qualities of tone, the brilliancy and extraordinary range, he also finds himself well adapted for the concert stage and his work here was most commendable from every standpoint. But the appealing thing about his buoyant personality is a wholehearted enthusiasm and excellent idea of dramatic values that gives convincing and genuine portrayal to his histrionic numbers.

Director Chapman has done much for Bangor and the people of eastern Maine by bringing here such an array of artists as he has done this year and not a small part is due to his excellent judgment in adding to that long array of capable musicians such an artist and wonderful tenor as Ernest Davis.—Bangor (Me.) Daily News.

Some Comment on Wm. A. C. Zerffi

William A. C. Zerffi in a recital at Cable Hall made a decided impression on the large audience that greeted him.—Georgian, Atlanta, Georgia.

Mr. Zerffi possesses a rich baritone voice and the wide range of selections on his program proved him to be a most versatile singer. In addition to English numbers he gave several selections in German, French and Italian, showing equal familiarity with each language. His enunciation was good and his voice at all times under perfect control.—Star, Indianapolis, Ind.

Mr. Zerffi's voice, which is called bass-baritone, is agreeable and well trained, showing to particular advantage in the purely lyrical numbers. His method is free from affectation and his articulation beyond reproach.—Times, Indianapolis, Ind.

William A. C. Zerffi sang with ease and brilliancy, smooth, clear diction and an unusual depth of interpretation. From the lighter vein of fun and frolic which characterized "Warnung" to the powerfully dramatic "Erlkoenig" one saw how completely he was master of tone technic and interpretation. His rich baritone voice was shown to great advantage through the medium of Carpenter's "May the Maiden" and Huhn's "Invictus."—Herald-Courier, Bristol, Va.

The Vatican Singers in Chicago

The concert season in Orchestra Hall opened brilliantly yesterday afternoon. The audience filled every available seat in the auditorium and on the stage left only place for the concert givers and their grand piano. And enthusiasm matched the size of the assemblage. It was the first hearing in Chicago of the quartet of singers from the Sistine Chapel in Rome, and interest, especially in Roman church circles, naturally was at the highest. It may be said at once that the four singers proved conclusively and enjoyably their artistic worth, and the program, although more severe than concert audiences are accustomed to listen to on Sunday afternoons, nevertheless held attention close from beginning to end, and speedily roused to approval hearty and generous.

Two or three selections needed to be heard before the majority of the hearers came fully in harmony with the work. The American public is not accustomed to the male soprano and the male contralto, and the effect of the voices of Alessandro Gabrielli, soprano, and Luigi Gentili, contralto, impressed at first as strange and to some almost ludicrous. But soon the finish and ease of the work done, the beauty of the voices themselves and the unmistakable sincerity and earnestness of the two men caused only music values to be considered, and the remainder of the program brought but steadily increasing satisfaction and pleasure.

The afternoon became thus one of high merit. The four men sing with a perfection of technical precision that tells of long and diligent preparation, with a delicacy of shading and a unanimity of interpretation that evidences careful and constant rehearsing under some one directing mind that is a mind of fine musical taste and feeling. Especially exquisite is the work done along the lines of pianissimo and medium volumed singing. Here the four voices blend and balance perfectly. Only when fuller effects are used do the two ends of the quartet impress as weak. Then the contralto of Mr. Gentili and the tenor of Mr. Gecchini tend to overshadow the voices of their fellows, and it is only in such moments that the soprano of Mr. Gabrielli takes on suggestion of roughness and impurity. These moments, however, were comparatively few yesterday afternoon and the four voices throughout the remainder of the program impressed as of true beauty and admirably used. Mr. Gabrielli's soprano is oftentimes of surprising loveliness, and the audience yesterday was quick to respond to it.—W. L. Hubbard in Chicago Tribune.

Matzenauer Triumphs in Opening of Buffalo, N. Y., Concert Season

Buffalo's musical season was formally opened at Elmwood Music Hall last evening, when the first of the Sidney Burton series of concerts took place with Mme. Margaret Matzenauer, distinguished contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Company, presenting the program, with Emil Polak at the piano.

Mme. Matzenauer, a regal, beautiful figure in flesh-colored satin with overdress of crystal and lace, was in splendid voice and gave of her best with glowing opulence of tone color.

Her magnificent artistry, in which eloquence of vocal appeal and the delivery of the text are happily united, embellished every number. Her first offering, "Lungi dal Caro Bene," was a fine example of the best in the Italian school of singing and elicited great applause. Her Handel number, "Lusinghe Piu Care," further revealed her skill in sustained phrases and brilliant vocalization, but when it came to the aria from "Le Prophete," "Ah mon file," she touched a high point in dramatic and vocal presentation and won an ovation for her magnificent offering.

In four Grieg songs, delicate and lovely as miniatures, she painted each mood with delicate beauty and, recalled, sang "Annie Laurie," which won another outburst of enthusiasm.

In her French songs her elegance of diction and cultivation of style won further tribute and her rendition of the aria from "Samson et Delila" revealed her in the full glory of her histrionic powers, with lusciousness of tone and effective contrasts—Buffalo Courier, September 17, 1919.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

By Effa Ellis Perfield

1. What is Pedagogy? The SCIENCE of presentation.

2. Could a teacher be well schooled in "Psychology" and fail as a Pedagog? Yes!

3. Could a teacher be well schooled in a SCIENTIFIC "Pedagogy" and "psychologically" be a failure? No! A scientific Pedagogy embodies psychology, but "psychology" does not embody "Pedagogy."

4. How does a teacher know that he is producing the best psychological effect? By using a "Pedagogy" based on PRINCIPLE.

5. Does "method" or "system" mean a cut and dried presentation which makes each pupil do the same thing? No! Only the teacher WITHOUT Pedagogy turns out pupils that lack individuality. It is a LACK of "method" and "system" which does not enable the teacher to meet the needs of the individual.

6. Does a teacher need to "adapt" his "teaching principles" to "local conditions?" No. A SCIENTIFIC principle is already ADAPTED. The pupil MAKES the application, NOT the teacher.

7. Why is it that teachers constantly confuse "Principle" with drills? Because "principle" they have not acquired.

8. Is it necessary to use "some articulated work or syllable to label the tone?" No! Not when the teacher presents PURE tonal FEELING.

9. Why do many teachers teach intervals and scales before chords? Because they DO NOT KNOW HOW to teach chords WITHOUT intervals and scales.

10. Will a neutral syllable eliminate the bad effect of "do-re-mi?" No! Because the scale and interval system is still used for the singing basis. "Do-re-mi" alone is only "half bad."

11. What is the worst feature of the "do-re-mi" syllables? They are not FUNDAMENTAL because they are not FINAL. They are used for years and years and years in order to FINALLY NOT USE them. Is this scientific? No! Do we go on crutches through childhood in order to learn to walk?

12. When should Sight Reading begin? In the kindergarten!

13. When should Part Singing begin? In the kindergarten!

14. How long should Rote Songs be used? From the kindergarten on through all grades and High School! Why? Because of MUSICAL STIMULUS, MUSICAL MEMORY and REPERTOIRE!

15. Is "questioning" the most important instrument used by the teacher in classroom exercises? No! The most important function the teacher performs is keeping the channel of expression open.

16. Do you know of any school where Rote Songs are used to teach Sight Reading? No!

17. What is the basis for "do-re-mi"? The scale and interval.

18. What is the basis for all Key Feeling, Part Singing, Improvising and Harmonizing? The FEELING of TONES in CHORDS.

19. Will a child "absorb" CHORD FEELING from its practice on the piano? No! Even many music teachers who have played for years and years, and who teach piano playing, LACK the feeling for tones in chords, and cannot take Harmonic Dictation.

20. Why do Choir Girls and Glee Club members have to work out a difficult place in a song by the "syllables"? Because they have not developed the FEELING for tones, and are still leaning on the "crutch"!

21. Why do some call intervals and "do-re-mi" "two ways" of teaching Sight Singing? Because they DO NOT KNOW that BOTH are BASED ON the SCALE SYSTEM. The drill may vary, but the PRINCIPLE is the same for both.

22. Is it necessary for any one to know all of the Perfect, Major, Minor, Diminished and Augmented "Intervals" in order to intelligently read notes? No! Music teachers who know all of these intervals in the simple key of "C" cannot take each interval and complete its chord. Why? Because they DO NOT KNOW the complete chord system (48 chords), which is necessary for the use of all intervals.

23. Is the "do-re-mi" simple? No! Not unless the "parrot-like" repetition of these syllables applied and confined to the scale is all that is considered.

24. Why is great knowledge said to interfere with successful singing? Because such knowledge has not the MUSICAL STIMULUS back of it.

25. Would you test a pupil's Sight Singing by his accuracy in producing the correct pitches? No!

26. What is the test of a pupil's Sight Singing? Musical production!

27. What is Musical Initiative? The ability to express through example, memory or eye.

28. Will Reasoning and Analysis stimulate Musical Feeling? No!

29. What is the great value in first efforts in Sight Singing? Self Expression! Pupils hear their own voices instead of reproducing a song by imitation.

30. What is the STIMULUS for singing? "Inner Feeling."

31. What is "Inner Feeling"? It is the IMPULSE which PROMPTS EXPRESSION.

Mario Salvini's Pupil Engaged as Soloist in Brooklyn Church

The results of good teaching always redound to the benefit of the pupil, as well as to the teacher. As an example may be cited Raymond Green, a young tenor, only twenty-four years of age, pupil of Mario Salvini, who has been engaged as soloist at the First Reformed Church of Brooklyn. The days have come when an artist pupil can earn while still studying. To his teacher Raymond Green is a valuable asset. Mr. Green was a pupil of Carl Watterman of the Lawrence Conservatory of Appleton, Wis., but ever since his establishment in New York he has had the expert guidance of the excellent Mario Salvini, who has just offered a $2,000 scholarship to the one best endowed with musical gifts. Mr. Salvini has resumed teaching at his old studio, and his class is growing with each season.

To honor Admiral Conz and for the benefit of the Italian Milk Fund, an operatic performance was given at Madison Square Garden on September 28. "Cavalleria" and "Pagliacci" were the offerings. In the former the following appeared: Romeo Boscacci, Stella De Mette and Rosa Ponselle. In the latter: Manuel Salazar and Riccardo Stracciari, and G. Merola conducted.

Roumanian Violinist Comes to New York

Jean Nestoresco, a violinist pupil of Carl Flesch, arrived here about the middle of September. The young Roumanian violinist has to his record seven years of war service. Previous to the 1914 hostilities, he participated in the Balkan War of 1912-1913. He has been an entertainer with the A. E. F. in France, playing eighteen hundred concerts under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. He had the honor of bringing official letters to the Roumanian Embassy at Washington, instituted for the first time in the history of the Roumanian Kingdom. Though thirty-one years of age, he has been professor of violin at the Academy of Music at Bucharest, professor of music at the Conservatory of Saloniki, Greece, and official violinist of Queen Mary of Roumania. He will remain in America, where he is expected to appear in recitals.

The Opening Season

Beginning October 5, and continuing until June 15, 1920, music is going to be one of the greatest factors in the life of the metropolis. More than ever the number of musical events eclipse all records. Musical agents and managers of various entertainments will receive no attention from the writer unless tickets are sent for their events. It is true that only on rare occasions the writer has been neglected by the channels of "press courtesy," but a reminder will absolve me from any blame. Owing to the overtaxing work of reviews, Sunday performances will be commented on, always, one week later.

George Blumenthal Resigns From the Star Opera Company

It is announced that George Blumenthal, manager of the German Star Opera Company, has resigned to join, in the same or similar capacity, Mrs. Oscar Hammerstein, the wife of the deceased impresario. Mr. Blumenthal was once connected with Mr. Hammerstein, and now he will join in the effort to commemorate the impresario's services to America.

The American Course Concerts and Some Facts

I am in receipt of a circular announcing an American course of five concerts to be given at the Manhattan Opera House during the months of November, December, January and February.

We applaud Miss Gretchen Dick, the manager, for her decision to promote American artists, thus eliminating some foreign competition, and especially for the following lines, "artists wholly trained in America or partly abroad." But there are some facts which contradict her purpose and other facts which are not of a true nature. I note for instance John Powell, pianist, is to be soloist among the fourteen instrumentalists and vocalists. Mr. Powell is wholly a European product, "having studied" for five years at Vienna and made his debut in 1908 at Berlin. Marcia Van Dresser, though she received some training in America, will have to admit that her abilities, if she claims any, are due to the instructions received at Munich and of Jean De Reszke in Paris. Eddy Brown, who is to appear in the capacity of a violinist, credits his fame to Leopold Auer of Hungary.

Albert Spalding, one of the most brilliant of present day violinists, was trained at Florence and in Paris and is therefore a Latin-French product.

I do not mean to assert that we at home could not have done as well with the musical training of our natives, but the manager of the concert series falls back on a motto which many an individual has abrogated for selfish interests. One confusion which still prevails in our musical circles is the claim made by some teachers that certain young singers and pupils, and especially when one goes abroad, have studied with a foreign pedagogue, but a great many of these claims are incorrect.

We should not confuse "training" and "coaching." A coach is not a teacher nor is he usually able to place a voice in the proper way. Many of our singers credit their successes to coaches, not to those who really deserve the true recognition. These evils prevail all over the world, but we should not be disturbed by foreign conditions but must try to remedy the home evils. Miss Gretchen Dick has selected fifteen soloists from her Manhattan concerts, but why not place alongside the ones who already earn comfortable sums others who are in dire need of promotion and money? I can point out a great number of instrumentalists and vocalists, wholly trained in America, who will do as well, if not better, than Lambert Murphy, Reinald Werrenrath and Merle Alcock.

Aurore La Croix, pianist, exclusively trained at Boston; Harriet McConnell, a beautiful mezzo-contralto; Theodore Karle, a superb tenor voice, trained exclusively in the United States; Lily Meagher, a charming lyric-soprano. These names could do honor to America, but none of them are on the boards of the Manhattan Opera House for reasons too well known by the organizer of the Manhattan course. Unless national figures undertake the propaganda of American artists, I can see no headway. Unless prominent and national institutions help our music and its interpreters I can see no hope for our native talents. Unless national conservatories and municipal opera houses are instituted by our legislators and municipal authorities to help American music and its artistic forces, there is no prospect of a real encouragement of home talent.

FOX PUPIL IN RECITAL

Albert E. Fox has been a successful teacher of piano in Chicago for a lengthy period and has started on the pleasant road of musical progress a number of youths and maidens who went up to goodly distances. They reflected honor on him while they gave him credit. When he made his little introductory speech at the opening of a series of recitals for this season it was easy to see beneath his words that a dominating factor in his makeup was enthusiasm. Given that along with adequate preparatory work and a teacher need never wane in influence, authority and unbounded pleasure. Because it is a pleasure to lead if you are enthusiastic. It is the lubricant for all the petty obstacles which do so continuously clog and impede whatever task life sets before us.

The occasion for Mr. Fox's enthusiasm on last Monday evening was the undeniable development of a gifted youth who has been under his care these several years. A year and more ago the present reviewer heard the lad play. James Virgil Huffman is his name. He is a likeable chap, boyish and unaffected in manner and brimful of an ability which by all tokens should carry him far if he can add to his talent the "stern devotedness to duty" by which the upward path is ascended. Just now he is in a transitory state, past the place where surprise attends on the listener who wonders how the marvelous gifts are bestowed which enable children to accomplish wonders. He is under good guidance in that he is maturing slowly. It might even be said that his playing was in a measure controlled by his teacher's commands. There is a certain tensity which might be called self-consciousness, which is far from the triviality we call conceit. The coming days will see freedom and elasticity and a ringing personal note to make the playing dominating and superior. It seems justifiable to look for a pianist of remarkable attainments when young Mr. Huffman comes finally and fully into his own.

The program was eclectic and memorizing such a group of works so as to be almost impeccable as to notes, clean and sure as to technic, neat and accurate in phrasing and sensitive to color and accent, is a testimony to skill, energy, patience and ability. The Beethoven "Pathetrique" received reverent and hearty attention, a Chopin group was healthy and honest in its musical purpose; Haydn's "Variations" were clarified in simplicity and a long list of genre pieces from many sources were well in hand and given with desirable feeling.

Grace Grove was to have played accompaniments for Eleanor Pogue, but indisposition interfered and Alfred Holmes was his able self in supplying piano support for two groups of songs by a young singer whose name has escaped me for the moment.

ALBERT COTSWORTH.

DANIEL MAYER RETURNS FROM ABROAD

Daniel Mayer, the New York concert manager, returned from Europe on the Cunard liner Caronia, on September 24. Mr. Mayer had been in England since late in July and had been most actively engaged during all the time he spent on the other side. He was warmly welcomed by his old associates in the musical circles of the British metropolis. Mr. Mayer has arranged to reopen his London office on March 1 and therefore, in future, will be able to look after the interests of his artists abroad as well as in America. One of the first of his artists to be sent abroad will be Miss Olive Moore, an American contralto, who will make her debut in New York early in the season and almost immediately afterward sail for England, where she has already been booked for more than twenty recitals.

In November, 1920, Mr. Mayer plans to introduce in America Frederic Lamond, the great Scotch pianist, whose successes in London of late have been of the most pronounced kind. His last recital, given in London shortly before Mr. Mayer sailed, was completely sold out two days after the announcement was made and the program had to be repeated and again many were turned away. Mr. Lamond has been hailed by the English critics as one of the ablest interpreters of Beethoven now before the public, and within a short time he has given four Beethoven recitals in London. Mr. Mayer pronounces Mr. Lamond's performance of the Tschaikowsky concerto in B Flat Minor with the London Symphony Orchestra, one of the finest that he has ever been privileged to hear.

In January, 1921, Mr. Mayer will bring to America the Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company, the most famous operatic organization in Great Britain, outside of the Covent Garden Company. The tour will open in New York and will extend across the continent to the Pacific Coast, from where the entire organization will sail for Australia. The company is a most famous one and, oddly enough, it was organized in America some twenty-five years ago. The late Carl Rosa took it to England and it at once became so popular that it has remained there ever since, giving extended seasons each year in the principal cities of the United Kingdom. The performances will be given entirely in English and the repertoire will include all the standard works. Artists of distinction will be brought forward in the principal roles and it is assured that the performances will be on a plane of excellence beyond that hitherto attempted in English opera in this country.

Mr. Mayer reports that conditions in musical London are much better than he had been led to believe from other reports sent to this side. The best artists have been drawing crowded audiences in recital and Covent Garden audiences were quite as numerous as in pre-war days. Interest there is keen over the first appearances of such artists as Mme. Galli-Curci, Levitzki, Heifetz and others who have achieved their fame here in America and have yet to be heard in London.

Levitzki—Mischa Levitzki, whose first New York recital of the season is set for November 18 in Carnegie Hall, will open his season early in that month, when he appears as soloist with the Minneapolis Orchestra in Minneapolis and St. Paul.

Mrs. Lester, soprano, and Mrs. Worthington, contralto, were the soloists of the evening, singing the "La Gitana" (Arditi). It makes a lovely thing when sung with such surety and artistic finish as on this occasion. They were recalled many times, and responded with encores.

The Italo-American Association for Music, of which Otto H. Kahn is the chairman, has been advised from Rome through the Italian ambassador at Washington that the tour of the Saint Cecilia Orchestra, which was to begin an American tour at the Metropolitan Opera House a fortnight ago, has been deferred because of the maritime conditions in Italy. The orchestra is the oldest symphonic organization in Italy, embracing more than eighty members, and was being sent to this country for its first tour outside of the land of its origin. His Majesty the King of Italy and the Italian Royal Government were the official patrons, and the leading civic and musical organizations of the United States and Canada were presenting the orchestra in concerts in the selected cities. These organizations have been requested to defer further arrangements until the settlement of the industrial and labor questions in Italy.

A DREAM or
WHY I BECAME A SINGER
By Josephine Lucchese

Several years ago, when I was a little girl, I had a dream which left such an indelible impression upon my mind that it has influenced my whole life and, acting upon the strange message, I became a singer, with what results I cannot tell as I am just starting on my musical career, but I have faith in the future and sincerely hope that, as in my dream, I may indeed become a "Messenger of Happiness."

Here is the substance of my dream:

It was one of those beautiful summer nights such as can be found only under the wonderful Italian skies. Not a breath stirred the tepid air, and the full moon spread its silvery light over the Roman Campagna.

Along the Apian Way three persons were slowly walking, enjoying the ideal summer night. Two men, one old, white-bearded; the other, young; and a slender, white-robed girl. In the distance the lights of the Eternal City were faintly quivering in the bright clarity of the moon. In a cluster of blooming oleanders a nightingale was singing his love song.

The strangers, enraptured, listened to the sweet music.

"Tell me about art, father," spoke the girl, taking the arm of the old man.

"Art! Child, you would know about art"? answered the sage in kind tones. "Well, God, knowing how dreary and troubled is the road of life, has sent down on this earth some of his messengers of happiness to embellish the world with His celestial harmony. These blessed ones sustain, with their refreshing bounties, humanity in its hour of need and despair. God has given art to humanity, even as He has scattered over the desert fresh oases, without which existence would not be possible. Art is the fountain at which the thirsty traveler quenches his parched thirst."

"Oh, nonsense!" laughed the younger man, whom we shall call the cynic. "Art is but vanity, an expression of man's colossal egotism. Egotism and vanity, that is art. Vanitas Vanitatum!"

"I trust in God," said the young girl, with simplicity.

"The mission of art," continued the wise one, without paying any attention to the remark of the cynic, "is to sustain man in his faith, for God has placed within the bosom of every human being a divine harmony which man has called art, and when this celestial harmony begins to bloom in man's soul it is like a heavenly dew, refreshing to the arid soil——"

"You make me laugh," snickered the cynic. "Art is a device of the wicked to beguile fools in a stupid contentment of their wretched lot. Under the multi-colored butterfly lurks the ugly caterpillar."

"Do not pay any attention to him, my daughter, and let him rave. The mission of the artist is a noble one. His is the mission to open the souls closed to the sentiment of the beautiful, to strengthen the faltering hearts, to console the unhappy ones and convert cynics, to spread contentment and happiness. To accomplish this the artist must have a pure intent, he must be virtuous, his life as spotless as the lily."

The cynic grinned and the fair maiden slightly blushed. The sage remained silent for a moment, walking in a pensive mood, then he raised his noble head and an inspired flash gleamed in his eyes.

"I have known many artists," he mused in a low voice. "God had given them wings to soar with in the ethereal realms of art but they preferred to wade through the mud —they were perverted. And when they wanted to fly their mud-soaked wings pulled them down back into the mud. God had created them to shine as stars in His heaven —they preferred to be meteors—and when they came in contact with the realities of the world they were pulverized into dust. Only the virtuous survive."

"Art is only a palliative to our ills, a mirage that spoofs us into the desert of nothingness. There is nothing real about art—all mirage," harshly commented the cynic.

"Do not believe him," hastened to retort the sage. "It may at times appear that art is an expression of egotism, and often artists are filled with vanity. True, the perversion of man has surrounded art with abyssmal perils, but there is nothing so beautiful as to withstand temptation. The true artist is the harbinger of God, and he must be able to stand temptation, and when one of these angels falls then he is longer an artist. Moreover, if God has given you talent He has given it to you that you may embellish the world. What would you think of the nightingale if he were to remain silent, impassibly staring at his empty nest—if he were not charming our ears in the tranquil moonlit night with his melodious songs"?

"I, too, want to be a nightingale, singing my songs to embellish the world," said the girl with enthusiasm.

"Ha, ha, ha! A fine nightingale you would be, indeed!" mockingly laughed the cynic. "You had better look out for the cat, my little canary! Oh, vanity, thy name is woman!"

"Why should you not sing like the nightingale, my child? If God has given you a voice consider yourself blessed. He has appointed you one of His harbingers to embellish the world."

The three wanderers had come to a ruined Roman circus; they contemplated the sombre, majestic edifice in silence, and the wise man suggested that they take a short rest in the abandoned stadium. They sat down in the marble amphitheater. In the distance the nightingale continued his song.

The cynic lit a cigarette and smoked in silence. The wise man listened to the voices of yore, which seemed to dwell in this antique temple of art. Seized by a sudden inspiration, the girl had descended into the center of the theater. Her long, black tresses were spread over her delicate shoulders and in her flowing, white robe she stood there like a goddess of old, descended from Olympus.

A wonderful, inner emotion thrilled the girl. Thirty centuries seemed to look down upon her from the marble steps of the ruined amphitheater. She had a vision of the past; she saw a throng of ancient Romans eagerly watching and she, she saw herself as the heroine of a Grecian play, with a golden lyre in her bare arms, her white peplum gently floating in the zephyr of the night, her head crowned with a garland of roses. She heard a mysterious voice calling her and unconsciously, electrified, she began to sing, following with her arms the rhythm of her song, as though she were accompanying herself on an unseen harp.

Her voice, somewhat veiled at first by the emotion, gradually acquired a magic timbre, a powerful, eloquent, irresistible appeal and a great sweetness permeated the stillness of the night and the innermost recesses of the heart. Even the cynic felt an involuntary thrill as he lay there, reclining against a fallen Corinthian pedestal, apparently unmoved by the magic scene before him.

The girl sang on and on in the enchanted night. Her voice floated in the air as if on wings, in limpid tones, issuing from the depth of her soul.

The cynic continued to listen, distracted, wondering if, after all, everything is but vanity. After a while he threw his cigarette away and, gradually, an expression of rapture spread over his usually cold countenance. Then his hardened soul softened and tears rolled down his cheeks.

Oh, those sweet tears, which the orator, the artist, the poet draws from our innermost being! A refreshing dew which seems to give new birth to our soul, purifying it of all the foul thoughts which haunt it in this senseless struggle for power. The girl, too, wept.

Oh, the fragrant essence of those tears! The baptism of a new-born genius!

Rapture itself seemed enraptured. A cluster of sycamore trees growing near the Roman theater seemed to feel the thrill of this heavenly music, for their dark foliage quivered with ecstasy in the balmy night. The nightingale, astonished, remained silent for a moment, first marveling, then ravished, enraptured by that divine voice and those sublime harmonies.

Then the celestial harmony ended.

A moment of supreme suspension.

Everything was quiet. Nature seemed to drink in up to the last faint echoes of that divine music, which still floated in the placid atmosphere.

Impelled by a superhuman force, the cynic stood up and jumping over the marble steps he ran down into the arena and threw himself as the feet of the girl, imploring her forgiveness.

"Oh, sublime creature, forgive me! You have opened a new horizon to me. Forgive me for having doubted! I was a fool when I thought that life was but an empty shell. Ah, you have disclosed unto me all the beauties of life in a sole instant. Your singing is as a baptism of faith to me, and I have found my soul at last. No, no! Life is not all vanity, after all. Life, the world, the skies, everything is beautiful—only we are blind. How true! 'They have eyes but they see not, and they have ears but they hear not!' Blessed art thou, O woman, who hath made me see and hear the divine harmonies of this universe!"

"Yours is the voice of God," gravely said the wise man, who had joined the two on the scene. "Go forth into the world, my child, and pour out your wealth of golden notes. Embellish this afflicted world with your songs. Art is a gift of God: Share it with the afflicted, the discouraged, the hopeless. . . . Show them the light. . . ."

And slowly the strangers walked back towards the Eternal City, filled with a reverent feeling of gratitude for their Creator and the universe, while the nightingale, in sheer delight, poured out his wondrous melodies in the tranquil Italian night. . . .

MARIO SALVINI

The very attractive vocal studios of Mario Salvini, at 206 West 71st street, New York, in their harmonious environment are a center of art and activity. Here pupils are prepared for church, oratorio, concert, recital and grand opera, the needs of each voice receiving careful and constant attention. To the all-important vocation of singing teacher, Signor Salvini is very devoted, and it is easy to see that his heart and soul are with his daily work. As he is an accomplished performer, he is able to preside at the concert-grand piano and gives what seems akin to orchestral support. About tone placement, diction, phrasing, breathing, interpretation and all other requisites he is very particular and his pupils feel that after each lesson a definite object has been accomplished, especially as he is ever ready to demonstrate and explain minor details as well as consequential points. His wide experience in Europe and America and gifts as a linguist have rendered him an international authority on vocal subjects, and his ever-increasing circle of friends are proofs of his genial influence and popularity. Frequent musicales are held at his studios, where a recent visit by this writer was productive of much pleasure.

Refinement of Tone and Delicacy of Touch

Are the Distinguishing Features of the

IT is these features that lend confidence to an artist when playing a recital. Nothing is so inspiring to even the amateur as the sympathetic tone and the wonderfully responsive action of the Baldwin.

Editorial

PASSING COMMENT

Music News is in receipt of a very interesting document from Eleanor Everest Freer, composer and patriot, who has devoted herself so fully to war work in various phases the past few years that she is certainly entitled to ask all other musicians now to help in a matter which is very near to her heart.

The article concerns the Paris-Chicago Hospital, which she is promoting, and reads as follows:

To the Editor: It seems axiomatic to say that the future of France depends not only on the courage, energy and health of the present generation, but also on the health and strength of her children. We are so cognizant of this fact at home that it is astonishing how apt we are to forget the tremendous needs of our sister republic today and for years to come.

The Paris-Chicago Hospital is to open its doors to all who suffer. We need not necessarily wait until a whole and magnificent modern hospital be built, but can put up one small building of department at a time and ultimately have, perhaps, in this way the more perfect hospital. A most necessary unit is a department for facial, dental and plastic surgery. If the late Dr. Morestan performed 12,000 facial operations during this great war, it is but evident how much there is still to be done. We could start each separate building with $50,000, and it seems as though we ought to have one or more immediately. We have all been interested in national enterprises, but the citizens of Chicago and Illinois should be, primarily, interested in this gift, which is essentially one from Illinois to France. Internal medicine, facial and plastic surgery, departments for women and children and one for general surgery can be suggested as the most necessary departments at the start.

The musicians of Illinois should also join in endowing a bed for musical students from our city and state, studying in Paris.

I am indebted to everyone who has assisted in any way in this plan, feeling that, later, one and all will take a pride in Illinois' representation through such a needed and philanthropic gift. Our debt to France can hardly be paid, but we can show our gratitude, appreciation and sympathy in this gift.

ELEANOR E. FREER,
Founder and Treasurer.

Further particulars on this splendid work may be had at Campaign Headquarters in the Marquette Building.

We have received also a letter which, we are informed, was sent in duplicate to George G. Seaman, State Chairman American Legion; Earl B. Searcy, Secretary American Legion, and to Music News.

We print it without comment or discussion. Each reader of this paper must decide its merits for himself:

Mr. Henry D. Lindsley, National Chairman American Legion, 19 West Forty-fourth Street, New York City.

Dear Sir: As an honorably discharged soldier and a member of the American Legion I wish to call attention to the following:

Attached hereto please find clipping from The Music News of Chicago, under date of October 3, 1919, in which F. Wight Neumann, a local manager, announces a recital by Fritz Kreisler, the Austrian violinist, to be given on November 2 next at the Auditorium of this city.

No further comment would seem to be necessary, except to say just this: Kreisler, as you well know, is an Austro-German officer and served on the Russian front during the great war, where he was reported wounded. Early during the war he was granted an unlimited leave of absence by the Austro-Hungarian authorities for the purpose of coming to this country and concertizing, ostensibly for the benefit of the Austro-Hungarian Red Cross. He has been here ever since, and had the audacity to concertize even after we had declared war on Germany and Austria, until the public sentiment against him became so strong that he had to retire. Nevertheless he remained at large in the United States, being merely tolerated by the Federal authorities on the strength of his discreet conduct, I presume. And now he has the brazenness to reappear before the American public, though the ink of the signatures to the peace treaty is barely dry.

Is it possible that those of us who wore the khaki are to be insulted by having flaunted before us German artists and German opera? Is it possible that the American public has so far forgotten itself, in its insane desire to be entertained, to remember that 115,000 and more of its brave men laid down their lives in the Great War? Is the memory of these brave heroes, most of whom lie buried under those endless little white crosses at the foot of Belleau Woods, Chateau Thierry, in the Argonne Forest and in other isolated places in France, so flagrantly to be desecrated by a colossal indifference which will permit the bringing to these shores of German artists, though not a year has passed since the signing of the armistice?

There is no doubt that the Germans and pro-Germans in this city and New York and other big centers in the United States would be elated to fill to overflowing any auditorium in which Kreisler may appear. And sadly enough, there is a small American coterie of so-called music lovers—internationals—who would also patronize him and who would literally sell their patriotism and their souls for a pot of musical pottage. But are there not enough real, 100 per cent, red-blooded Americans in the United States to put the stamp of disapproval on anything of this kind?

On my return from France the fore part of last month I noticed a large poster at the entrance to Carnegie Hall, New York, in which Kreisler's name appeared with others as soloist with one of the great symphony orchestras of New York.

I also append herewith another clipping from The Music News of the same issue, giving an account of the action taken by the United Posts of the American Legion at New York in regard to the German opera which it is the intention of a certain manager to give in New York this season. May I not ask in all earnestness that the American Legion, which stands for 100 per cent Americanism, by all legitimate and peaceful means at its command, lend its moral influence to bear against the giving of recitals by German artists, and against German opera, in this country, at least at the present time, when the deep wounds inflicted by the Great War have not even commenced to heal?

Respectfully submitted by

(Signed) JOSEF KONECNY,
Member Victory Post No. 1, American Legion.

The following comment on the organ playing of Clarence Eddy was printed in the Wheeling (W. Va.) Daily News. We will leave it to Music News readers to decide whether or not the music critic of the paper had "just escaped" or whether the proof reader of the paper had "gone on strike."

Mr. Eddy in his recital last night delighted those who claim to know a little of music and those who do not make such claims. We have never heard one against who managed to keep our interest at such a high level throughout the whole program.

The program itself was interesting. If you carefully look it over you will see the "classic style," the modern English, modern Italian, Russian, modern German, and American, which is all modern. We are a modern people. We hear the great "hue and cry" that the American composer, the American singer and player are not given their chance. They all want their chance, but when the chance is given we often come to them in too critical an altitude. We expect Bach's and Magner's, and we haven't them yet. It is easy to be critical.

Last night in Stroughton's "Neptune" we could hear the influence of "synocofhated time" which carried too far in "Rag." Also that "overweet" quality one hears in the "sentimental duty." This did not make us like the composition any better, but if it is the best we have, let's hear it, and maybe something better will come.

One American number, Concert Caprice, by George E. Turner, was extremely interesting. The man wrote well and we were glad to hear it.

Mr. Eddy's playing was full of vitality and his phrasing was exquisite. In painting, in writing and in music there is the academic style and there is the style and there is the style for want of a better word, know as the "impressiontic" style. We will make right here an "artistic confession." We would rather have in any work or performance an occasional flash of the spark of genius or vitality or whatever you care to call it, than "dead level perfection" without "the flash." Where can you find the two things together you lose a real genius. This is seldom. The Bach number, the Russian boat song, Schupert's inspired "Rose Maria," the modern German "Evening Harmonies" by Harg Elertgase as the greatest pleasure. We hope to have Mr. Eddy with us again.

That "free organ recitals" are not a necessity or even a desirability is proven in the following extract from a letter from Daniel A. Hirschler, who recently played a very successful program at Emporia, Kan., and who says:

"The numbers on this organ course are paid recitals, and the audience demanded encores after every group, extending the program to about an hour and a half. Which also proves that organ recitals can be a success if they are not free, as usual."

Here follow a poem or two from the pen of Blanche Blood of Chicago:

MY ROSEBUD

You are a rose of rare perfume,
A bud just coming into bloom;
Far sweeter than the fairest flower
That grows in vale or leafy bower.

Your cheeks with dawnlike blush are warm;
Graceful and delicate your form;
Sweeter your voice than nightingale,
Whose melody the sun would pale.

The light of heav'n shines from your eyes,
Deep hidden there in sweet disguise;
But greater far than all the rest
Gleams your bright mind, supremely blest!

'TIS YOU

The very flowers breathe of you;
The sun, the moonlight, and the dew,
And birds are singing sweet and true—
'Tis you, 'tis you, 'tis you!

The nightingale 'neath starlight's gleam,
Singing its song to grove and stream,
Call to my mind but just one theme—
'Tis you, 'tis you, 'tis you!

The stream that onward to the sea
Pursues its course of destiny,
'Twas ever thus, 'twill ever be—
'Tis you, 'tis you, 'tis you!

Through life and through the realms sublime
To me, it matters not the time:
One theme remains through ev'ry clime—
'Tis you, 'tis you, 'tis you!

I NEVER CAN FORGET

I never can forget, though land and sea
Stretch drear and dismal 'twixt thy heart and me,
Though months have flown since the last time we met,
Visions arise that I can ne'er forget.
Your face I see, your wondrous voice I hear,
Each to my heart immeasurably dear;
Ever in dreams you linger by my side
To cheer my soul, and ev'ry footstep guide.
So the dull, leaden moments quickly fly—
Swift as the fleet-wing'd swallows passing by.
Days may dissolve into the rolling years,
Pleasures may come, alloy'd with bitter tears;
But with your gentle spirit near my breast,
Naught can affright, and naught disturb my rest.

A STORY

(Copied from an exchange)

IN THE SAME BOAT

Two prominent Senators, boyhood friends, were discussing how strict had been their early religious training and how they had departed from it in late years.

Said A to B: "I don't believe you even remember the Lord's Prayer, do you?"

B answered: "Oh, yes, I do; I'm not such a backslider as that."

Then A said: "I'll bet a dollar you cannot say the Lord's Prayer straight through."

B promptly declared that he would win that dollar, and, after a moment's thoughtful hesitation, repeated slowly:

Now I lay me down to sleep,
I pray the Lord my soul to keep;
If I should die before I wake,
I pray the Lord my soul to take.

"By Jove!" said A; "here is your dollar; I didn't believe you could do it."

AMERICAN SYNCOPATED ORCHESTRA

The American Syncopated Orchestra, Will Marion Cook conductor, is already engaged in its seasonal tour of the country. The happy music of the instrumentalists and singers everywhere draws audiences composed in great part of persons whose taste has been developed but not restricted by music that is ambitiously formal.

This organization, composed of thirty Negro musicians under the direction of Will Marion Cook, gives to the public examples of Negro music, both vocal and instrumental, including not only present day melodies, but original plantation songs and spirituals. It is not only an orchestra of strings (including banjos), wood and brass; each member is a singer as well as an instrumentalist.

"They are the musical aristocrats of their race," said Herman Devries, and Karleton Hackett remarked that "in the midst of the most crazy 'jazz' they will suddenly settle into a tone of the most exquisite beauty, for, after all, they are music makers."

LEVITZKI DATES FAST FILLING UP

Daniel Mayer has booked Mischa Levitzki for a recital with the Music Club of Fredonia, N. Y., on November 3, which will be his first appearance for the season. The pianist's season is now closely booked, as he is only available from November until March on account of his Australian tour, for which twenty-five recitals have already been contracted for.

SCHUMANN-HEINK PRESENTS NEW WORK OF FRANK LA FORGE

Mme. Schumann-Heink will feature an entire group of Frank La Forge's songs on many of her programs this season. Her rendition of "Before the Crucifix" has brought much fame to that lyric, and now the diva has added four others to it and sang them for the first time when she opened the new Masonic Temple in Cleveland, Ohio, October 3. The new song written expressly for Mme. Schumann-Heink, "To Our Boys in Flanders," closes the group. The diva speaks most enthusiastically of this new song. It is still in manuscript, but will appear in about a month. Harold Flammer is publishing it.

Margaret Porter Spalding

Margaret Porter Spalding, whose likeness is shown today on our cover page, is a contralto whose work will most certainly bring her to prominence before a very wide clientele eventually.

For whoever hears this young singer is impressed immediately with the glory and the charm of voice, and as she is also a most attractive personality and an intelligent and faithful worker along all lines leading to complete musicianship, it follows, inevitably, that she will realize all the hopes of her friends for an unusual career.

Her voice is contralto of the purest kind. It is produced with a purity and an even quality throughout which is remarkable, in view of its power, and which makes Miss Spalding almost unique among contraltos, for she has absolutely an even and unbroken scale throughout the entire range of her voice.

In a recent private hearing Miss Spalding sang "He Was Despised," from "The Messiah"; "The Worldly Hopes Men Set Their Hearts Upon," from "The Persian Garden"; "Oh, Let Night Speak of Me" (Chadwick), and "By the Waters of Minnetonka" (Lieurence), and throughout this significant and varied material she showed constant beauty of tone and excellent musicianship, as well as interpretative thought of the most attractive description.

Miss Spalding is an Omaha girl who came to Chicago two years ago to study with George W. Jenkins, and is still under that successful tutelage.

Previous to her leaving Omaha, while yet a high school girl, she studied with Walter B. Graham of the Nebraska city.

Wherever Miss Spalding has been heard in Chicago predictions have been freely made that she will have an unusual career.

She has been engaged for the coming Spring Festival at Amarillo, Texas, and will sing there the solo alto parts in Rossini's "Stabat Mater" and Goring Thomas' "The Swan and Skylark," and in a joint song recital with Thomas Fannelle, Chicago tenor.

PORTLAND, ORE.

The Portland Symphony Orchestra has planned a series of concerts, the first to be given November 12. Dates have been set for the appearance of several artists at different times, in conjunction with the orchestral programs, namely, Rudolf Ganz, pianist; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Sophie Braslau, contralto.

Portland people are deeply indebted to Mrs. Donald Spencer for the firm footing upon which this organization now rests. Last year the future of a symphony orchestra was rather doubtful, but Mrs. Spencer's faith and perseverance have been rewarded by the formation of a board of underwriters who will make possible for Portland this splendid series of concerts.

Carl Denton, who so ably conducted last year, will resume his duties in that capacity, and is very busy planning an interesting set of programs.

Katherine Glen, a Portland song writer, who is best known through her lovely composition, "Twilight," is soon to give to the public "The Song of the Lark."

MARY CAMERON AND THE Y. M. C. A.

Mary Cameron, pianist, has returned from France after a strenuous "concert season" for the American soldiers. Following is a letter that she received before her departure from Paris:

Miss Mary Cameron, Paris.

My Dear Miss Cameron: Permit me to thank you, on behalf of this department as well as the entire A. E. F., Y. M. C. A., for the very splendid work you have done while in our service. You have spent ten very hard months in the mud and the rain, and you have done it cheerfully. It must be a great source of pleasure to you when you think of the thousands of men whose day you have made brighter and happier by your work.

I trust that on your return to America you will find everything well with your affairs. We wish you a happy journey and again extend our heartfelt thanks and best wishes for your success and happiness in the future. Yours very truly,

A. M. BEATTY.

The programs arranged for the year are very interesting and include a special day, April 15th, when a paper on Mr. Mickwitz will be read by Miss Collier, and his "Twilight," "Minuet" and "Concert Etude" will be played by the Misses Hamilton, Allen and Whittaker respectively.

George W. Jenkins, tenor, one of the most popular teachers in Chicago, with studios in Lyon & Healy building, has to his credit as a singer of concerts and oratorio some of the best appearances with orchestras and choral organizations in the United States and Canada. Mr. Jenkins has been teaching in Chicago for several seasons and he is busy with his class throughout the days of the six set down as a week's teaching.

WALTER ZIMMERMAN

Among the most gifted organists of the younger coterie in Chicago is Walter Zimmerman, who has recently returned from war service, to fill his old position as organist of the First Church of Christ, Scientist. He is also assisting Eric DeLamarter in his organ recitals at the Fourth Presbyterian Church on Thursday afternoons and was heard there recently by this writer. He is an adept at adjusting himself to an instrument, and plays with authority and decision. In some of his own compositions he was especially effective. Mr. Zimmerman is a young composer of no mean merit, and we may expect to hear more from him in this field.

Among his coming concert appearances is numbered one in Dubuque, Iowa, on October 28, when he will undoubtedly install himself as a universal favorite. On a recent occasion at his own church he played Eric DeLamarter's new organ suite in E minor with great success. Mr. Zimmerman is just as good an accompanist as a solo artist, which is an asset all too rare. We hope to have many opportunities during the winter to hear this splendid musician.

DAVID BAXTER

David Baxter, basso, has been engaged as soloist at Fifth Church of Christ, Scientist, Chicago.

CHICAGO OPERA ASSOCIATION STARTS WHIRLWIND PRELIMINARY TOUR

In a whirlwind of excitement, the artists, orchestra, chorus, ballet and working crew of the Chicago Opera Association left Chicago Monday morning for Milwaukee. The special train, carrying no less than 250 people (to be exact, 233, with various and sundry guests, maids, cooks, relatives and pet dogs), pulled out of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Depot at 9:30 a. m.

The preliminary tour of the Chicago Opera got away to a flying start, after several artists of international repute had run breathlessly down the platform with bags and miscellaneous sundry baggage, such as canes, rugs, cameras and extra coats.

Mme. Emmy Destinn arrived, carrying, among other things, her own fishing pole, and explained that she hoped, notwithstanding her three appearances a week, to squeeze in a day's fishing in the course of this mid-Western tour. Mme. Rosa Raisa carried her own pet Mexican Chihuahua pup. Other prominent artists in the gathering were the sopranos, Emma Noe and Myrna Sharlow; the contraltos, Lillian Eubank and Irene Pavloska; the tenors, Alessandro Dolci, Forrest Lamont, Lodovico Olivero; the baritones, Georges Baklanoff, Desire Defrere, Giacomo Rimini, and the bassos Vittorio Arimondi, Virgilio Lazzari, Constantin Nicolay and Vittorio Trevisan.

Mlle. Anna Ludmila, premiere danseuse, was on hand, and Andreas Pavley, premier danseur, who will travel as ballet master on this tour. Teofilo De Angelis, the new Italian conductor, and Louis Hasselmans, the French conductor, were on board. Alessandro Bonci, the great Italian tenor, and Tamaki Miura, the diminutive Japanese prima donna, were absent, but it was said that they would join the company at Milwaukee.

No flags were carried to designate the various nationalities, but it may be said that rarely if ever had such a cosmopolitan gathering traveled in one train. There were special cars for the male chorus and the female chorus, the ballet of young dancing girls, and likewise for the orchestra and the working crews. There were, altogether, eleven Pullmans, one special compartment car, four seventy-foot baggage cars and dining cars.

But the real excitement began ten minutes before train time, when Mme. Rosa Raisa's little dog, Virgols by name, broke away and made straight for the wheels of a train standing near by. Although less than eight inches in length, its small person caused divas and chorus to unite in one shriek of dismay, until the brave efforts of Giacomo Rimini, Italian baritone, saved the day (and the dog). The train then started out without further incident.

DOROTHY DENHAM EICHENLAUB

A correction should be made in the review given Miss Eichenlaub in our columns last week in that the young pianist in question has been connected with the Knupfer Studios since their beginning and has done considerable concert work in the past few years, having played recently with the Lake View Woman's Club and the Musicians' Club of Women.

ARCHE CLUB MUSICALE

On Tuesday, October 7, the Arche Club presented a novel and interesting entertainment at the home of Mrs. Denver E. Evans. The program was in the form of a Japanese Musical Sketch, in costume, staged and directed by Mrs. Lizzie A. Clark, who had as soloists Miss Dorothy Metzger, Miss Ava Whitlow, Miss Mildred Metzger, Miss Margaret Moench and John McMahill Jr. The costumes were lovely and the simple scenic plan unusual and effective. Miss Whitlow, who possesses a contralto voice of rich quality, which she uses well, appeared in a group of five Japanese songs by Norman Peterkin—songs which left the listener in a quandary—as to the songs, however, not as to the singer. Miss Whitlow also sang Fay Foster's "Cruel Mother-in-Law," with good Oriental style, as nearly as this writer can imagine what Oriental style ought to be.

Miss Dorothy Metzger displayed a sweet, pretty voice in "The Shadow of the Bamboo Fence," and in "One Fine Day" from "Madame Butterfly, and both Miss Mildred Metzger and Miss Margaret Moench made attractive pictures in "Honorable Chop Sticks" (Fay Foster), and "The Jap Doll" (Jessie L. Gaynor). Mr. McMahill was in good voice and did a distinctive piece of acting in the "Nipponese Sword Song." A chorus brought the program to a delightful conclusion and great credit is due Mrs. Clark for her ingenuity and good taste in its selection and direction.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

LUCIE LENOX STUDIOS

Miss Hazel Meisterling, whose lovely mezzo-soprano voice came into prominence through the Lenox Recitals last spring, sang a charming program of Oriental Songs most delightfully at the First Methodist Church Tuesday evening, October 7. Mrs. Lenox presented Frances Coates, costume song interpreter, in "Musical Etchings—Old English, Scotch, and Oriental," at the Ridge Woman's Club, at Beverly Hills, last Wednesday afternoon, with Ruth Broughton as accompanist.

On Tuesday Miss Coates gave a Costume Recital of French songs before the River Forest Woman's Club, and this (Friday) morning is at the High School in that suburb, with "Musical Etchings—Old English, Dutch and Oriental," with Florence Grandland at the piano.

Miss Coates is an artist pupil of Mrs. Lenox, her manager.

Cook—Dwight Edrus Cook, tenor, was soloist at the Medinah Temple for the O. E. S. convention, singing "Morning" (Speaks) and "Good-Bye" (Tosti).

"Elijah"—The soloists for the Apollo Club performance of "Elijah" will be Lois Johnston, Anna Imig, Robert Quait, and Theodore Harrison.

Erb—The 155th organ recital of J. Lawrence Erb, at the University of Illinois, was given on September 28.

CRAVEN STUDIO NOTES

RADANOVITS PLEASED WITH WARREN PROCTOR'S SUCCESS

Warren Proctor has made a great success with Gallo Opera Company, and Mr. Radanovits, his teacher, is delighted with the success he has made.

The Philadelphia Ledger has the following to say:

The best singer in the cast—and in the organization, for that matter, as so far revealed—is Warren Proctor, who, as Ralph Rackstraw, repeated the hit which he made as Nanki Poo in "The Mikado," and gave further proof of his exceptional ability both as an actor and singer. Mr. Proctor has a handsome, romantic appearance and a true tenor voice of resonance and sympathy, and his singing shows both talent and training.

THE MEDINAH TEMPLE CONCERT SERIES

The first of the Medinah Temple Series of Concerts (Central Concert Company Management), took place on last Thursday and the attendance approximated two thousand people.

On the face of it that sounds like an enormous audience, but as a matter of fact it is far too small to make a good impression at the huge Medinah Temple, and there should certainly be forces put to work which will result in bigger audiences, for on Thursday evening that echo, which is disagreeably in evidence when the Temple is only partly filled, found full play.

The program was exceedingly popular and this grew, unquestionably, out of the fact that Riccardo Stracciari was one of the singers.

If anyone had any doubt of that fact previously, all this could not fail to be swept away, when, after the "Largo al Factotum" (Rossini), Stracciari was given an ovation which was of the kind that is heard only at the Auditorium on popular opera nights and very rarely any time or place otherwhere or wise.

Mr. Stracciari, superb in vocal style and interpretative feeling, was, naturally and emphatically, best in his operatic excerpts.

These included the "Eri Tu" from "Masked Ball" (Verdi) and scenes from "Aida" and "Trovatore," with Miss Ponselle, besides the "Barber of Seville" aria before mentioned.

The great baritone was greeted with rapturous applause and every other evidence of delight and scored again in that same way and vehemence which has ever been his wont in Chicago at the opera.

His short songs were a trifle less attractive, but even these were made the vehicle for exquisite interpretative feeling and fine vocal effects.

The accompanist, Romano Romani, might have been better—but was not.

Rosa Ponselle, the alternate singer, again demonstrated the values and the defects which were in evidence in Evanston last spring.

She had substituted the Bolshevik fan, which so distressed Evanston, for one of a bright blue hue, but otherwise her appearance was just as unattractive and outre as before.

She has, seemingly, no personality at all, and maintains the same facial expression regardless of what she may be singing.

This writer did not care at all for her performance in Brail's "The Legend" as seen at the Metropolitan last winter, but believes that in "Aida" or some other such uncouth impersonation she would succeed famously.

Her voice is, unquestionably, a beautiful one and her manipulation of it excellent for the most part.

She sang her operatic arias in the same stereotyped style as last spring at the North Shore Festival and the little songs with just the same style as the big ones, emphatically a "big" style.

The mongrel "Suwanee River — Home Sweet Home," brought by Miss Ponselle from the vaudeville stage, was again used and vastly pleased probably nineteen hundred and ninety of the two thousand people present.

The second concert will be given next Thursday evening and the artists will be Giovanni Martinelli, tenor, and Toscha Seidel, violinist.

YSAYE WRITES OF SAMETINI

In a new book, published by Frederick A. Stokes, written by Frederick H. Martens, there is a chapter by Eugene Ysaye in which occur the following sentences:

"When I take the whole history of the violin into account, I feel that the true inwardness of violin mastery is best expressed by a kind of threefold group of great artists.

"First, in the order of romantic expression, we have a trinity made up of Corelli, Viotti, and Vieuxtemps.

"Then there is a trinity of mechanical perfection composed of Locatelli, Tartini, and Paganini, or a modern equivalent — Cesar Thomson, Kubelik, and Burmester.

"And, finally, what I might call in the order of lyric expression, a quartet comprising Ysaye, Thibaud, Mischa Elman and Sametini, the last named a wonderfully fine artist of the lyric or singing type."

Among the recent public appearances of Flora Waalkes is one on the last Sunday in September at the Woodland Park Presbyterian Church, where she sang the soprano part in two cantatas, Gounod's "Gallia" and "Hear My Prayer" (Mendelssohn). She will appear on the last Sunday of this month in Schubert's "Song of Miriam." Miss Waalkes' voice is especially adapted to the singing of church and choral works and she has the added distinction of good musicianship, which makes her work stand out in a singular way.

EDNA WHEELER BALLARD

Mrs. Ballard occupies a unique position in Chicago's music field in not only being considered one of our most talented harpists, but in being identified with the faculties of four or five different conservatories, among these being the Chicago Musical College, the International Conservatory, the Birchwood Studios and the Wilson School of Music. Mrs. Ballard does considerable concertizing, appearing last week at the Hamilton Club in this city.

MUSICIANS' CLUB OF WOMEN

The second concert of the Musicians' Club of Women on October 13 proved as successful as these concerts usually do—which bespeaks a high degree of artistic merit. The program was opened by the Murdock Trio in Arthur Foote's C Minor

ETHEL GEISTWEIT BENEDICT

Trio, that delightful composition, which they did with great charm and insight of interpretation. The ensemble was good and the shading well considered and delicate. Mary Cameron, just returned from war service, was received with a veritable ovation and played a group of three numbers with great distinction. De Severac's "Return of the Muleteers" bristles with military decision, and the other numbers represented some very original genius of the modern school and were done with artistic understanding of the material in hand. They were "Prelude de Profundis" (Balfour Gardner) and "A Reel" (Stanford-Grainger).

A group of duets done by Ethel Geistweit Benedict and Ruth Simmons Worthington stood out as the crowning feature of the afternoon. Not only was the ensemble perfect in all its finest aspects, but the voices were of a quality to blend in a most delightful way. Both Mrs. Benedict and Mrs. Worthington are distinguished soloists and church singers, and the duo is especially well chosen.

The song groups made a part of the program, the first done by Agnes Scott Longan Hauer, and the second by Mrs. Orville Thompson, substituting for Mrs. J. Sidney Burnet.

Ruth Bradley, in accompaniments for the singers, did most excellent and artistic work.

One of the finest of local accompanists is Miss Bradley, and she is booked for a very busy and successful season.

FLORENCE MACBETH AGAIN THE GUEST OF SOROSIS

There's an irresistible charm about Florence Macbeth, as all those who have met her know. It is something apart from her wonderful voice, something unconsciously attractive, hardly definable, but it is there. And that is why the Sorosis, New York's most exclusive club, so often invites her to be a guest.

In the many busy moments of her career Miss Macbeth has a very limited opportunity to indulge in social functions, but she always finds time for the Sorosis, because, unlike most society clubs, its meetings are devoted to educational matters of the higher order. Whenever you go there you are sure to find present, as a special guest, some stellar light of the higher arts, who has some wonderful message to deliver.

Sometimes Miss Macbeth speaks there herself, sometimes she sings; this week she sang, and sang charmingly. There were old French and English, and added to the charm of her voice was the most interesting and lucid description of the music of the period in which the composer lived, as well as what, it is conjectured, gave the composer his inspiration.

It is given to few mortals to sing as our own Florence Macbeth, but even had her wonderful voice never been discovered it is certain that her charm and genius would still have given her an important place in the intellectual circles of her native land.

ST. JOHN'S CATHEDRAL, MILWAUKEE

The first appearance of the season of the full choir occurred Sunday, October 5, at the 10:30 a. m. High Mass. Otto Singenberger, director and organist, has given his choristers a long vacation and, fresh from the rest, they added much to the beauty of the Mass. There is a nice, mellow, rich tone to the choir, not an overbalance of sopranos. The boy soprano, Ambrose Sullivan, does great credit to Mr. Singenberger. The voice is his own, but the developing by his director has made it more than a beautiful voice.

The opening Sunday was made as light as possible until the choir is back in regular rehearsal form, so the program given here was not so extensive as it will be in a few weeks. The choir appeared very large, but one could not be sure the full quota was there.

The following numbers were rendered:

Processional—Immaculate Mary ..... Tozer
Proper of the Mass Gregorian, Honor of St. Patrick ..... Wiegand
Offertory—Soprano solo, Ave Maria ..... Abt
Ambrose Sullivan
Recessional—Immaculate Mary ..... Tozer

Mr. Singenberger at the organ is decisive and his instrument leads the work in a spirited manner. A concert by the choristers will probably be an early announcement.

Gingrich—A song service at Berry Memorial Church last Sunday evening, under the direction of Irving Gingrich, included, by the choir, "Jehovah Reigns" (Mendelssohn), "He, Watching Over Israel" (Mendelssohn), and "Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem" (Maunder); and "Only a Little Way" (Frances Martin), tenor solo by A. A. Johnson, and "Lead Thou Me On" (Fearis), baritone solo, William Epple.

COLORED JUBILEE SINGERS IN MILWAUKEE

The one hundred mixed voices under J. Wesley Jones, in their evening concert at the Auditorium, Saturday, October 4, created no small amount of enthusiasm. Inclement weather was no doubt to blame for the sparse audience. The program was made up of spirituals and plantation songs, and many incidental solos.

Their racial characteristic rhythm found expression in motion and singing, and characteristic also was the plaintive throb that pulsed through the tone.

There was very little boisterous singing or shouting. Well-knit unison work in both pianissimo and fortissimo. It's the kind of singing that makes a shiver run through you—a minor cadence that draws on something far below the surface. They love melody, and somehow add much to it with their, at times, croon-like caressing of a phrase.

There were no programs, so the soloists will go unnamed, among which were three sopranos worthy of mention, and an excellent bass with male chorus gave "Old Black Joe."

Two very beautiful numbers by one of the lesser-known colored composers were "Steal Away to Jesus" and "O Hear Me Pray."

The women's section sang several numbers, among them "Kentucky Babe," and the male section pleased as much among their offerings with a lullaby. Other numbers were: "Dreaming of the Lord," "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot," "To Heaven I'll Go," "We'll Praise His Holy Name," "Suwanee River," "Listen to the Band," "If Your Cross Is Heavy," "Send Me a Little Prayer," "When They Crucified My Lord," "The Old Flag Never Touched the Ground," "Oh, Mary, Don't You Weep No Mo'," and "Lead Me All the Days of My Life."

Hardly a number but what was repeated, besides extra encores. One of the particular bright spots of the evening was the distinct enunciation, even in their lightest pianissimos. Not a great, but a truly interesting aggregation.

MILDRED BROWN

Miss Mildred Brown, talented and well-known Chicago violinist, has returned from an extensive concert tour of sixteen months' duration, and has resumed her activities in the fields of teaching and concert work in and around Chicago.

Miss Brown met with splendid success wherever she appeared. The territory covered included practically every state, from Maryland and Delaware to Prince Edward Island, in Canada, and as far west as Colorado and the Dakotas.

CHARLES W. CLARK

Mr. Charles W. Clark, eminent Chicago baritone, sang in Buffalo on October 6 with the Orpheus Club.

Mr. Clark is also preparing a volume on musical interpretations entitled "Clarkisms."

How to sing a song and the word pictures we must paint between the lines to feel the real value of interpretation is the theme of Mr. Clark's essays.

NEWMAN'S TRAVELTALKS

E. M. Newman, Traveltalker, on Wednesday and Friday evenings, and Saturday afternoon, at Orchestra Hall, will give the one big thrill of the war. In motion pictures and color views, his Traveltalk, "Occupied Germany," will take his audience where the American soldier is pacing his beat on German soil. The thrill is good for the returned soldier as well, for he may point at his comrade and say to those who waited anxiously at home for his return, "and they thought we wouldn't fight."

Newman traveled along the Rhine from Mainz to Cologne while we were still at war. He secured passports which enabled him to visit Berlin. He was privileged to go wherever he would, to question freely, and he has returned to show what Germany really looks like and to tell of the many startling things he actually heard from the lips of prominent Germans. In this Traveltalk the skilled traveler will reveal conditions as he found them in Berlin, Trier, Luxembourg, Landau, Mainz, Wiesbaden, Cologne, Coblenz, and many smaller places where something of especial interest to the stay-at-homes was to be found. "Occupied Germany" is an amazing Traveltalk, and the thoughtful person will be greatly astonished at Newman's personal experiences.

CHICAGO JEWISH RELIEF

A loaf of American white bread, bearing on its nourishing crust the simple legend, "Share," is the symbol of one of the most generously conceived and broad-minded philanthropic campaigns on record. For millions of starving war victims this loaf of bread seems brighter than a star of hope—and it is inscribed on the banners of the campaign for funds in their behalf, which takes place in Chicago from October 26 to November 1, inclusive, under the auspices of the Chicago Jewish Relief Committee.

In spite of the fact that Jewish men, women and children of central and eastern Europe will be the main beneficiaries, the campaign will be essentially non-sectarian in character, and the membership of the relief committee is largely composed of leading Chicagoans who are not of the Jewish faith. The appeal for aid for those innocent victims of war's cruel aftermath will be made to people of all creeds in Chicago and the State of Illinois during the campaign week.

THEODORE HARRISON SINGS AT KALAMAZOO

Theodore Harrison, the popular Chicago baritone, engaged for the Apollo Club "Elijah" performance early in November, sang a recital before the Kalamazoo County Teachers' Institute at Kalamazoo last week.

Mr. Harrison prefaced and interlarded his program with brief synopses of his groups and the success of the whole program was marked.

He presented a group of Old French Songs—Songs in English, the "Vision Fugitive" (Herodiade) and the Song Cycle "Love's Triumph" by Huhn.

LA PORTE, IND.

Edna Walgrove Wilson and Ruth Nuss appeared in joint recital before the Advance Rumely Club of La Porte, Ind., last Friday evening. The program was a brilliant success thruout, every number meeting with the heartiest applause by the audience.

Miss Wilson and Miss Nuss, namely the "Edruth Duo," will sing Tuesday evening for McKinley Lodge, A. F. & A. M.

They have also been engaged for an evening's program December 19 at the installation of Banner Blue Lodge.

LOUIS SIMMIONS

Mr. Louis Simmions, after a busy season teaching a summer class at Lake Hopatcong, N. J., has resumed instructions at his studios, 26 Fifth avenue, New York City, and is co-operating in his work with Giuseppe Bamboscheck, assistant conductor of the Metropolitan Opera House, to direct and coach operatic repertoire for his most advanced pupils, and also Ottokar Bartik, ballet master of the Metropolitan Opera House, to teach stage deportment or the action of the body in Singing, which Mr. Simmions considers a most important part in the making of a career for a singer.

Mr. Simmions will devote two days a week to the Merrill School for Girls, Mamaroneck, N. Y., where he is already booked to give an average of one hundred lessons a week, which means a very busy season, considering he has only four days a week in New York City.

Mr. Bernardo Olshansky, baritone, who gave a recital at Aeolian Concert Hall, New York City, on Tuesday evening, October 7, under the management of Loudon Charlton, is a pupil of Mr. Simmions.

Miss Lucile Lawrence, dramatic soprano and operatic singer, who sang successfully in Mexico.

Miss Marrianna Carrell, mezzo-contralto.

Mr. Joseph Mendelsohn, baritone, who is only twenty-three years old, has been a pupil of Mr. Simmions for five years, and when Oscar Hammerstein heard him sing engaged him for the opera he was supposed to give in New York.

Miss Rose Tracy, a gifted coloratura soprano, has an offer to sing in opera.

Miss Beatrice Bowman, a coloratura soprano, is singing successfully around the country.

Miss Hertha Harmon is singing in public.

NUMEROUS ENGAGEMENTS CAUSE WINIFRED BYRD TO ALTER HER PLANS

Winifred Byrd did not anticipate starting this season's work until she reached the Pacific Coast, where she is to make her first appearance in San Francisco on November 7. Instead, however, the demand for recitals by her made it necessary to change her plans. Just when she was ready to return to New York from her summer home in Belmar, N. J., a telegram came asking if she could open the Star Course of Winthrop College, Rock Hill, S. C., on October 3, as she had done last season. When Queen's College of Charlotte, N. C., learned that Miss Byrd would be in the South they immediately re-engaged her to start the musical events of the season at Queen's College on October 20.

On October 3 Miss Byrd played to an audience of 1,800 people—the largest attendance Winthrop has ever had for a musical event. So enthusiastic was the student body of 1,100 girls over Miss Byrd's performance that they lined up several hundred strong in the corridors of the college after the recital, and when Miss Byrd emerged from the green room cheered her loudly for several minutes.

Miss Byrd will leave directly from the South for the Pacific Coast, where she is engaged to appear in all the largest cities in California, Washington, Oregon, Utah, Colorado, Texas, etc. Mrs. Gouled, her personal representative, who will tour with her until her return to New York City in January, writes: "When I learned that Mr. Daiber, Miss Byrd's manager, had booked her solidly for several months and that she had to play and travel continuously, I decided to tour with her to relieve her of the many annoyances that one encounters in traveling, so that she can at all times reserve her energy and give the best to her audiences."

Miss Byrd regrets that this long tour caused the cancellation of her New York Aeolian Hall recital of November 10. However, on January 11, the date intended for her Aeolian Hall recital of the season, will be utilized for her first one, and a second recital will take place at Aeolian Hall in April.

Miss Byrd's numerous engagements include several orchestra appearances, among them the New York Symphony, under Mr. Walter Damrosch, on March 2. A full list of the cities in which she will appear on her western tour will be published in a later issue of Music News.

Votichenko—Mr. and Mrs. Sasha Votichenko, who have been enjoying a motor trip through Canada, stopping at many of the principal cities, where they were enthusiastically received and entertained, have returned to New York. In November Mr. Votichenko will go on tour with the Russian Symphony Orchestra. Among his original compositions which have been orchestrated by Modest Altschuler and which will be played during the season are: "Easter Chimes in Little Russia," "Marche Heroique," dedicated to the heroes of the war, and "The Song of the Chain," a composition that was suggested to Votichenko by the weird music which the Siberian prisoners, whom he visited while collecting the folk songs of Siberia, made with the rhythmic clinking of their heavy chains.

TEOFILO DE ANGELIS

Teofilo De Angelis, the new Italian conductor of the Chicago Opera Association, has arrived in Chicago. He comes directly from the Costanzi Opera House, Rome, where he has conducted most of the operas of the Italian repertoire during a long service of twenty-five years. Caruso, Battistirie, Galli-Curci, Raisa, Stracciari, Ruffo, Galeffi, Schipa, Bonci, Tetrazzini, Dolci and Rimini are but a few of the great Italian artists who have appeared at the Costanzi during that time.

Maestro De Angelis will have as his first duty with the Chicago organization "The Masked Ball" ("Un Ballo in Mashero"), Verdi's great masterpiece, which is to be given during the preliminary tour in place of "La Boheme," as previously announced.

Like most experienced conductors, Maestro De Angelis has conducted at many of the world's great opera houses, notably at Florence, Bologne, Ravenna, Trieste, Brescia, Buenos Aires and Brazil. He is also a distinguished composer and has brought to America an opera called "Alba" ("Dawn"), which he hopes to have produced another season. His first notable composition was a pantomime in one act, produced in 1896 called "Pierot la Spia" ("Pierot the Spy"). He also wrote a symphonic poem entitled "Idilio Campestce" ("A Sylvan Idyl"). In 1903 he produced the opera, "Vigilia di Nozze," at the Teatro Morlacchi, in the city of Perugia. It was later produced, in 1905, at the Teatro Adriano, at Rome, and met with great success.

SOME TALK WITH ROSA RAISA

The first of the Chicago Opera stars are back—Rosa Raisa, Alessandro Dolci, Giacomo Rimini, Constantin Nicolay, Vittorio Lazzari, all of whom will go on the preliminary tour of three weeks, which began at Milwaukee on October 13.

Rosa Raisa, whose illness threatened to cut short her career, is delighted to be back, and looked the picture of health when she arrived at Chicago on Monday. She was carrying her little Chihuahua Mexican dog, named "Virgola," meaning a mere little punctuation mark—a "comma."

When seen at her suite in the Congress Hotel, Madame Raisa told with pleasure of her wonderful trip to Italy this summer, the beauty of the Italian lakes, and the courage and spirit of the people, despite the ravages of war.

"But it is so good to get back and taste a glass of good milk!" she exclaimed. "Do you know I have been eating black bread all summer?" The people are so kind, so enthusiastic, but they have lost all their young men. And the food supply is really very short. Women in Italy have to stand hours and hours in line to get a litre of milk. And, of course, as you know, thousands are still living in the war ruins.

"I drove in my machine," she continued, "to Trento and Trieste, and they do not look even like cities any more. But the people have courage, and I have great faith in their future. Of course, I was there when d'Annunzio took Fiume, and I can assure you that I found nobody in Italy willing to criticize him. On every side there were demonstrations of joy and cries of 'Brava d'Annunzio.'"

Mme. Raisa then told of having studied this summer her new role of Vasiola, in "La Nave." She visited Montemezzi, the composer, and announced that she would open the season in this role on November 18th.

She also stated that she would create the role of Isaura in Marinuzzi's new opera, "Jacquerie," and the name part in "Suor Angelica," by Puccini. She also said she would appear in revivals of "The Jewess," by Halevy, and "L'Africaine," by Meyerbeer.

MUSICALE IN EVANSTON

Last Monday a delightful program was given at North Shore Hotel by Helen Rockwell, soprano; Carl Beecher, Anne Oldberg, pianist, and Beatrice Byxbee, accompanist. Miss Rockwell made a good impression; her voice is of fine quality and she sings with surety and poise. Two groups were hers, and she gave with special style and ease French numbers by Vidal and Barberolle. Elgar's "In Haven," Grant-Schaefer's "The Wind Speaks," were lovely in tone, quality and phrasing. Miss Rockwell should be heard often. Miss Byxbee was artistic and musicianly at the piano.

GEORGE LANE

George B. Lane, a young bass-baritone from England, now residing in Chicago, is a survivor of the ill-fated Lusitania, and the terrible ordeal he passed through in this awful disaster is most thrilling, for after helping women and children into the boats, he jumped eighty feet into the water without a life-belt, and was fortunate enough to grab a piece of wreckage which kept him afloat until he was picked up by a small fishing boat.

Mr. Lane was on his way to England to join the British Army, in which his four brothers were serving, but after his awful experience he was unable to enlist and he came back to this country, spending most of his time in the mountains of Colorado.

In 1917 he enlisted in the Canadian Army, serving as Sergeant in the First Central Ontario Regiment. Mr. Lane made his first appearance in America at Carnegie Hall, New York, as soloist with the famous Royal Welsh Choir, later appearing at the Aeolian Hall, and the White House, Washington, before President Wilson and family.

This picture shows Mr. Lane in the uniform of the Canadian Army.

E. E. HARDER AND HIS COMPOSITIONS

That Chicago possesses a composer who is ultra modern in the most advanced sense of the word is evidenced in looking over the compositions of E. E. Harder, which were recently scheduled in Music News.

These compositions have political significance, according to Mr. Harder, and in line with this thought, he sent copies of them during the past year to every ruler, potentate and president in the world.

He has received a portfolio full of replies from kings, presidents and other such notables and an examination of these is certainly an agreeable and diversified pastime.

CARRIE MUNGER LONG

A Musical Talk (Illustrated by Children) was given by Carrie Munger Long, teacher of the Dunning System of Improved Music Study, at the Woman's Club Building, on Ashland avenue, on Friday afternoon, October 10, and was repeated at the Barnum Recital Hall, in the Fine Arts Building, the same evening.

WITH MR. NEWMAN IN ALSACE-LORRAINE

"I tell you it was a woman who caused all this trouble," said one Irishman to another in France last year.

"Well, and who was it, then?" asked the other.

"Her name was Alice Lorraine," said Number One, "and all the fighting was on her account."

. . . . . .

Thus began the Traveltalk by Mr. Newman at Orchestra Hall last week, and though we soon discovered that Lorraine and Alsace are quite different countries from each other, yet coupled in his lecture and pictures, they became fascinating to the final degree.

Mr. Newman showed, first, some of the ghastly effects of the war in France (after an animated map which in itself was a whole evening's entertainment and which left all of us more knowledgeous about the war than we had been before), and after that swiftly transported us to Lorraine (and afterwards to Alsace), where the actual effects were not so marked, in so far as damages are concerned. but where the social and political differences resulting from the war are simply beyond telling, of course.

Mr. Newman has, some time since, attained the premier place among traveltalkers and the pictures he shows this year are very beautiful as well as being of such vital import that the evening spent with him last week was one full of delight as well as of the utmost educational importance.

High points in the course of the pictures were the pulling down of all the German statutes in Lorraine by the populace, the reception given General Castlenau in Colmar and the Armistice Celebration in Strassbourg.

There were also many pictures which were interesting from the nature standpoint and among these none were more so than the moving series devoted to an animal hospital in Lorraine where the love of the people for their dumb friends (animals of all kinds) was proven in the exquisite care bestowed upon the sick ones.

The thrilling patriotic moments of the evening were many and none was more so than the picture of the Doughboy sitting at the feet of the great lion at Belfort and the allegorical picture at the end where typical girls of Lorraine and Alsace waft kisses to the audience, indicative of the new found happiness as well as the gratitude of the Provinces restored to France after the armistice was signed.

Kathleen Colpitss, a pupil of Lyravine Votaw, left this week with the Ralph Dunbar organization, playing "The Chocolate Soldier," for a long season.

Lyravine Votaw goes the week of October 20 for a few days of institute instruction before the teachers in Robinson, Ill.

At the Dearborn School of Lyceum Arts, 614 Fine Arts Building, Miss Votaw's classes in Normal School Music and Theory for Singers are well organized and are doing serious work.

ST. LOUIS

St. Louis Symphony Orchestra and other musical events:

To the music lover and patron, the coming season is one of great promise. The interest shown in the forthcoming St. Louis Symphony Orchestra season is marked by a large over-subscription sale of tickets. This year's sale exceeds by $1,000 that of last winter. This large sale has been stimulated and created through the assistance given by the Women's Clubs, Chamber of Commerce, other Art and Commercial Clubs. The activity and success of the women's organigations on behalf of the advance sale of tickets has created a wide influence in the Symphony, which otherwise was supported by the musically cultured music students. We predict the influence and community interest will be much broader through this medium of propaganda.

The season opens Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, November 14th and 15th. Sophia Braslau, contralto of the Metropolitan opera, will be the soloist.

The American Concert Series is one of the first to open a regular season, the same to be at the Odeon on October 21st, artist to be Percy Grainger, pianist. Many well known stars will appear on succeeding dates.

People's Concert Course, under the direction of Elizabeth Cueny, will present at the Odeon October 24th Frances Alda, soprano, and Erin Ballard, pianist.

CONCERT AT FLORENCE R. BRAIL SCHOOL OF MUSIC

On Saturday evening there was a fine audience at Kimball Hall and much enthusiasm for the work of the pupils of several members of the Faculty of the Brail School of Music as well as some of the members of the Faculty also, who graced the program with their presence.

To detail the last named first, Miss Lelia Jesty, a splendidly intelligent and excellently routined musician with a fine soprano voice, who has lately joined this faculty, sang a group of pieces comprising "Ah Love but a Day," "Down in the Forest" (Ronald), and "If No One Ever Marries Me" (Lehmann), in a way to prove of exceptional charm to the audience.

In the first named she disclosed the fact of brilliance and power in fine degree; in the second she handled the pianissimo top notes admirably and in the last she conserved the quaint humor of the text in a way to make it altogether effective, while in all of them there was an attention to enunciatory values which was as fine as it was unusual, and a full quota of musicianship in all other particulars.

Two Jesty pupils appeared, Hazel Williams, the possessor of a fine, low voice, which showed to advantage, in spite of a sore throat, in Whelpley's "The Nightingale Has a Lyre of Gold," and with Miss Jesty and Mrs. Evalyn Fraley scored a complete success in the cunning trio "Rocking Time" (Rhys Herbert).

Mrs. Fraley, soprano, has a splendid personality, a good voice and excellent musicianship, and her singing of "I Hear a Thrush at Eve" (Cadman) "Beauteous Eyes" (Tosti) and the delightful "Pirate's Dream" (Grant-Schaefer), were much liked by the audience.

A third pupil whose singing was also enjoyed was Edith Alexander, whose number was "A Lesson From the Violet" (Marks).

FLORENCE R. BRAIL

The work of all these pupils and that of Miss Jesty herself was so fine in every particular as to augur complete success for this Department of the School.

Ruth Roloff, another faculty member, showed skill and finish in an interesting reading, and Richard Broemel, the violin teacher, himself played a fine accompaniment, and in the playing of his little pupil, Jake Gottlieb, proved to be also a successful teacher.

The piano numbers were given by pupils of Florence Brail, except in one case, and though they were mostly very young, they certainly proved again, and conclusively, that she is a painstaking and an artistic teacher.

The cunning Old English dance "Dorothy" was played by Sherman Anderson with Mrs. Colby at the second piano, and "Le Secret" (Gautier) by Corinne Dubowich, with Miss Brail at the second piano; this very talented little girl (Miss Dubowitch) playing also a Hayden Sonata in a way to astonish the audience through her intelligence and her style.

Anna Brenman, a young girl with astonishing power, especially in the left hand, played an Etude for left hand alone (Bachman), and the "Polonaise Militaire" (Chopin), and Miss Elaine Tomasso (a young member of the faculty), was scintillant in her performance of the Scherzo in B Flat Minor (Chopin).

All these piano pupils were so exact in readings, pedal manipulations and in general interpretative thought as to reflect very great credit on the School and to show also its constant and gratifying growth.

Does It Pay?

Max Kramm, one of the leading Piano Teachers of Chicago, says it does.

Mr. Kramm's Letter

October 12

Dear Mr. Watt:

It might interest you to know that the ad now running in your paper has been successful beyond expectations. There is no doubt in my mind that for a Chicago artist, trying to reach the right people, your paper stands today in a class by itself.

Sincerely yours,
MAX KRAMM.

MAE GRAVES ATKINS WINS SUCCESS WITH ROCKFORD MENDELSSOHN CLUB

The daily press comments as follows:

Rockford Mendelssohn Club could scarcely have arranged for its opening concert a more delightful and satisfying program than that of yesterday, giving as it did the club members and their guests an opportunity to hear an artist whom Rockford proudly claims as its own.

The hall was filled to its capacity and the singer as she appeared for her first number received a most cordial greeting.

Mrs. Atkins' voice, always beautiful in quality, has developed through her studies of the last several years, especially under Mme. Sembrich in New York, even beyond the most sanguine hopes of her friends, and her singing Thursday eclipsed that of any previous appearance before a Rockford audience.

In the first place she has a perfectly balanced and even scale, and throughout her wide range there is not a thin spot. Perfectly poised, her highest note is taken with the clarity and resonance of a bell and with utmost freedom, while the fullness of the middle and lower registers furnish a wealth of warmth and color from which she can draw at will to give expression to any musical emotion demanded by a composition.—Register-Gazette.

Mrs. Atkins returns to Rockford after a splendid development of her gorgeous voice in eastern studios, together with her public concert work of the past year, all of which have broadened her vocal and interpretative powers and fulfilled the prophecies of her vocal gifts.

Every number yesterday served to give some special phase of her vocalism which increased the enthusiasm of applause with which she was greeted and called for added numbers as encores.—Rockford Republican.

LYELL BARBER IN PIANO RECITAL

The first of the Sunday afternoon recitals promised by Miller, Resseguie & Tufts took place at Kimball Hall on October 12, and that the audience was made up largely of the personal friends of Lyell Barber (big as it was) was proven in the extraordinarily enthusiastic applause which greeted his every entrance and exit.

The entrance applause was because the audience liked Mr. Barber, and the exit applause because they liked his piano playing.

And this was, truly, very remarkable and very beautiful.

The Handel and Beethoven works, which first engaged his attention, were played with so fine a musical feeling as to leave nothing to be desired, and in refinement of tone as well as in delicacy of nuance the Beethoven especially was superb.

This was the Op. 53, and while the Allegro and Adagio are full of variety and fine in ideas, the Rondo, you will remember, is of interminable length and great paucity of musical motif, although the usual inventiveness of Beethoven is fully in evidence.

This movement, so often uninteresting, because played merely from the technical standpoint and without sufficient shade or color, was made into a living, glowing thing through the taste, the musical feeling and the technical perfection of Mr. Barber, and at its close the audience felt that it could have been much longer and still vitally enjoyable under such treatment.

The Chopin group was distinctly fine also, and one would have to go to many score piano recitals before running across another so beautifully played melody as was the case with the intermezzo portion of the Fantasie Impromptu, Op. 6.

The next group was ultra modern in trend, including Faure, Debussy and Ravel, and these, unless played in the proper manipulation, may easily become deadly dull, for, outre as most of this school is, to me it is its deadly monotony which condemns it.

Mr. Barber, however, besides having full appreciation and sympathy with the works presented, has also (in the virtues scheduled above) the exact paraphernalia with which to deal technically with this material, and the result is that it was possible to listen to this group, not alone with tolerance, but also, as was very evidently the case throughout the audience, with a full desire to hear more of it than was scheduled.

The program ended with works of Paderewski (at his most emphatic period) and Liszt, and as this is a genre of composition in which Mr. Barber always excels (he is young still, you know), the audience was sent away in a most happy frame of mind and carried to its many homes the impression that "when Lyell Barber plays again, I want to be there."

MOTHER'S CREATIVE MUSIC COURSE

This Course is especially valuable for the small child because it prepares him for school work.
It is CREATIVE, because imitation and self-expression are given complete freedom.
It is REFLECTIVE, because the first appeal is made through the "ear" by means of music, which the child loves, that which recalls and enlarges impressions made by association with pets, birds, pictures, stories, colors, and flowers.
It is CORRELATIVE, because through music, pictures and body expressions, the THREE educational senses (Ear, Eye, and Touch) are unfolded and applied to other branches of education.

A child 5 or 6 years old, in about ONE to one and one-half years.

Private interviews, by appointment, will be granted to Mothers and Teachers of Music and Kindergarten.
Mothers and Teachers may easily take this Course by mail.

MARIE KRYL HAS A FINE VACATION

The accompanying picture shows Marie Kryl at her summer home on Lake Leelanau, where she spent the heated term and where she devoted a great deal of time to the preparation of her fall programs.

She also devoted many hours to health-giving pleasures, for she is an expert horsewoman, as well as swimmer, golfer and motorist.

After her unpleasant experience of a year ago, when she nearly lost her life in Lake George, she decided this year not to spend much time in swimming, but found ample opportunities for the exercise of her other recreational talents.

Previous to going abroad late this fall, Miss Kryl is fulfilling many concert engagements in this country.

WILLIAM LLOYD ROWLES

The following matter, relative to William Lloyd Rowles, is gleaned from a new circular being sent out by that young baritone, who has recently been engaged as director of the Chorus Choir at the Fourth Congregational Church, Chicago:

Mr. Rowles is the possessor of a rich, resonant bass voice, and he sings with much style and breadth of feeling. He has had extensive concert and church experience, and has also sung in oratorio. His repertoire embraces the best in song literature, and he displays much intelligence and discrimination in his interpretations.

Mr. Rowles received his training at Hedding College, Abingdon, Ill., and at the Columbia School of Music, Chicago, under the direction of John Karl Jackson, who is responsible for the development of his voice. His experience covers a number of years in recital, concert and church work, and for the past year he has been intimately associated with the musical life at Camp Grant, Rockford, Ill.

Over six months were spent in the capacity of Camp Entertainment Director for the Army Y. M. C. A., where he was responsible for the securing of many of the most prominent people in the musical and dramatic profession to give entertainments for the soldiers. Mr. Rowles also used his own unusual gifts on many occasions, both in singing and in accompanying for various singers, an art in which he excels.

He has also contributed generously of his services to the people of Rockford and surrounding territory for concerts and benefit entertainments in the interests of the Red Cross, Y. M. C. A. and Liberty Loans. Mr. Rowles has always considered it a patriotic duty to assist in all efforts toward the winning of the war, and is eager to do his part as a musician in addition to fulfilling his duty as an American soldier.

Recent Engagements

Mr. Rowles has appeared in many concerts during the past few years, a few of the recent ones being: Portage Lake Hotel, Portage Point, Mich.; Ravenswood Club, Chicago, Ill.; Second Congregational Church, Rockford, Ill.; Congregational Church, Sycamore, Ill.; Opera House, Winnebago, Ill.; Chautauqua, Freeport, Ill.; Community Church, Park Ridge, Ill.; Universalist Church, Elgin, Ill.; Belvidere, Ill., etc.

CECIL FANNING

One of the most enthusiastic receptions ever given a singer in Ohio's capital was that accorded Cecil Fanning by the Rotary Club of Columbus when Rita Jolivet, a French actress and patriotic worker, was addressing the club. Mr. Fanning presented a group of patriotic songs and he closed with Oley Speaks' "When the Boys Come Home." Mr. Speaks, who is a fellow townsman of Mr. Fanning's, was present at the time. When the applause came it was of the roof-lifting variety. There were shouts of "bravo" for both singer and composer, and they were called upon to bow their acknowledgments together. Later Mr. Speaks told Mr. Fanning that he had done the song brilliantly and exactly according to his own ideas.

F. WIGHT NEUMANN INAUGURATES HIS SEASON

It must have been a gladsome sight to the Neumann vision to see the absolutely sold-out house at the Auditorium last Sunday afternoon and to witness the enthusiastic applause which greeted (almost all) the efforts.

And this augurs certainly and appropriately that Mr. Neumann is to have a fine and prosperous season, for he knows what the public wants and he is keen enough to give it to them in just the most desired proportions.

The public likes and wants Geraldine Farrar, and, not to repeat the strictures before uttered in these columns except to say that all the faults are still in full evidence in her work, we will pass on to the more agreeable task of commenting on the others of the little concert party which appeared on Sunday.

In the case of Arthur Hackett, alternate singer with Miss Farrar, one can feel elation in his possession of all those virtues which Miss Farrar has not and feel a distinct joy that her glaring vocal faults are not in evidence at all in his case.

He sings in tune, he does not "scoop" his tones, and his enunciation is a clarified delight.

A French group was exquisitely done. "Adelaide" (Beethoven) was a classic joy, and in the English text group his was easily the finest and most significant performance of the day.

There was a little disappointment in the work of Claude Gotthelf, accompanist.

He has been heard heretofore when there was positive and varied virtue in his work and indeed on Sunday he gave many evidences of musicianship and good pianism, but, unfortunately, he did not do a good job of accompanying.

Rosita Renard played two groups of piano pieces and, by turns, tender and vivacious, her whole performance being imbued with skill and clarity for the most part.

She was particularly glib in the famous Strauss-Schulz-Evler "Blue Danube" transcription.

LILY WADHAMS MOLINE

Lily Wadhams Moline, organist and composer, is enjoying much success as a teacher and organist at First Science Church, Oak Park. One of her recent compositions, "Memories," for organ, was given by J. L. Erb at University of Illinois recently.

EMMA ROBERTS STAR OF GLOBE CONCERTS

Emma Roberts opened her season at the third New York Globe concert at the DeWitt Clinton High School Auditorium on October 1, when she sang for an audience of over two thousand people. The contralto was in the pink of vocal condition after her summer's rest and gave the club members one of the most delightful concerts they have ever had. Her first group was made up of "Ah, Love but a Day," by Mrs. Beach; Grand Schaefer's "The Eagle," "The Ol' Ark's a-Moverin'," by Guion, which had to be repeated, and Chadwick's "The Danza." As an encore she gave the Loomis arrangement of "The Chattering Squaw," which she is singing this week with orchestra at the Worcester Festival. In the second part of the program she gave Dalila's air from the Saint-Saems opera and was forced to add two extra numbers, another Negro spiritual "Didn't It Rain?" by Burleigh and MacFadyen's "Inter Nos" before the audience would let her retire. Walter Golde furnished unusually satisfactory accompaniments.

CARPENTER CHAPEL COURSE

Perspicacity is an essential for a choir director—the art of discerning possibilities in people and places. George Lee Tenney is one of the far-seeing, and as generous as he is wise, in putting opportunity and talent into contact with one another. As the extremely successful head of the musical forces at New First Congregational Church, he has added new evidences of his many-sided ability in the continual novelty and interest he arouses in his workers and the great following which fills the church whenever he presents his large festivals. The famous choirs are in the best sort of shape, doing splendid work in the Sunday services, maintaining tradition and setting new standards at the same time. Mr. Teney handles things so easily that there is small suggestion of the enormous labor he puts underneath every one of his successes. He casually remarked, the other evening, that when this season's plans were fully carried out they would reveal thirty-seven elaborate affairs—a list to stagger any but the brave and efficient.

A year or more ago Carpenter Chapel was given to the church by Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Dole. Mr. Tenney's discernment at once saw opportunity for a course of concerts on a smaller scale than the Festivals, and he inaugurated them on last Friday. His spirit saw also a chance to utilize talent in his own fold, and the first concert very appropriately was given by those who had long been identified with the choir and had come from the ranks by reason of special gifts and more special attainment. Four loyal, hard-working young people made up a quartet which gave an excellent account of itself and had a many and agreeable earmark of Mr. Tenney's coaching. The vehicle used was the clever "Nonsense Songs" cycle of Lehman, and it was very well done indeed. Each singer was heard, as well, in a group of solos, and won liberal applause. Leon Jones is the regular tenor of the church quartet, Florence E. Boydston has a rich contralto and has recently been chosen for the South Congregational Quartet, and Emma N. Ewen, a very good soprano, has a fine record for excellent work. William A. Morse, the latest to be put forward by Mr. Tenney, has come along so rapidly that he is now the regular bass-baritone of the church quartet. The voice is large, virile, of fine fiber and wide range. The training has made it mellow and pliable, and the style is undeniably good. As for enunciation, he leaves little to be desired. He used Speaks' "To You" as an example of quiet manner, and Foster's "King of Ireland" for bravura, being effective and able in both. Some resonant, vibrating top notes made the latter number brilliant and dashing. This is a voice and personality which will bear watching.

Philip Manuel was heartily welcomed back, after his military service, and supplied model piano background. Mrs. Della Burnell, also from the choirs, contributed a group of piano numbers acceptably.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE CONCERT

The opening of the Saturday Morning Series of concerts at Ziegfeld Theater occurred on Saturday morning and again was the strength of the Chicago Musical College proven in the splendid audience present no less than in the worth and beauty of the program presented.

To begin at the end: Jane Anderson, an artist pupil of Alexander Raab, who has been heard often in fine surroundings and who was awarded honorary mention at the Orchestra Hall contest last spring by the jury headed by Ysaye, played the F Sharp Etude of Arensky with a speed, evenness and clarity which left no chance whatever for criticism, and in the "Soiree Vienne" of Schubert-Liszt (No. 6, I think), she gave a display of virtuosity which was astonishing for the students' rostrum and would have been notable anywhere.

Miss Anderson is charming in every way and her pianism is exceptional to such a degree that it is certain that she will have an unusual career.

Preceding her Bertha Kribben, a young artist violinist, who has been heard in professional work often but who still keeps to her lessons with her master, Leon Sametini, was heard in the Mendelssohn Concerto and played it with a strength of tone and of purpose as well as with a wealth of finish and charm which made it notable and which proved her to be an unusually gifted and trained artist.

The third student of the program who may easily be called professional in attainment was Elsie Weiskopf, a pupil of Rudolph Reuter, who played a piece of Korngold so carefully and so brilliantly as to give it values which in itself it could never possess, and in the Wagner-Brassin "Ride of the Valkyrs" she displayed a steadiness of rhythm, a conservation of melody (not easy in this terrific arrangement), and a constant attention to style and nuance which marked her as exceptional to the last degree.

"Lotus Land" (Scott) was well done by Valeria Brown (pupil of C. Gordon Wedertz), and the piano numbers included further the Fantaisia in F Minor (Chopin), played by Nevorah Bergman.

The vocal numbers included "Vilanelle" sung admirably by a young woman not on the program, who was so indistinctly announced by Mr. Borowski that no one knew her name; "Gloria," that brilliant work of Buzzi-Pecia, well done by Edward Freeman, "Ishtar" (Spross) and "The Robin Woman's Spring Song" (Cadman), sung by Madeline Reed and the "Louise" soprano aria, sung by Lygia Zabrocki.

C. E. W.

HINSDALE, ILL.

Emmanuel Choir, La Grange, fifty boys and men, under the direction of William Ripley Dorr, gave a concert last Sunday night at the Hinsdale Sanitarium, Hinsdale, Ill. Following the concert, the boys and men of the choir were the guests of the Sanitarium management at supper. The program was divided into two parts, the first of secred music, the second of secular. Among the sacred numbers were Cherubini's "Veni Jesu" and Tschaikowski's "Legend," the latter being sung without accompaniment. David Meyers and David Linn were the soprano soloists, and M. H. Serns, tenor, and Reid Hilliard, bass, sang solos in the secular part of the program. George Leland Nichols played Liszt's D Flat Etude between the two parts of the choir's program.

CHICAGO CONCERT ENSEMBLE

Sunday afternoon the first of the Chicago Concert Ensemble programs, George Dasch conductor, drew a capacity house, as always.

The program was lovely in content and given with rare good taste and a refinement that is always present in the artistic and musicianly baton of Mr. Dasch. The enthusiasm shown by the people attending these concerts is proof of their real worth, for it would be difficult indeed to find a more restful atmosphere than that of Fullerton Hall on Sunday afternoons when Mr. Dasch gives out in large measure the best in music literature.

South Congregational Church—South Congregational Church announces a Harvest Home Pageant and Festival on Friday, October 31, when Maunder's "Song of Thanksgiving" will be given.

ALICE VERLET

An error crept into Music News columns recently when an announcement was made that Mlle. Verlet, lyric coloratura of Grand Opera, Paris, had gone to Belgium. Mlle.

ALICE VERLET

Verlet's mother sailed in August and will remain in Europe until next spring, when the singer will join her for a short visit, and both will return to America. Mlle. Verlet has just returned to New York City from a tour in the West of forty-five concerts and leaves immediately for a three weeks' tour through eastern Canada, opening in St. John's, N. B. She is very enthusiastic over her success with the songs of American composers, and included among many on her programs and for encores are "From the Land of the Sky Blue Water" (Cadman), "Till I Wake" (Amy Finden), "Thy Beaming Eyes" and "Idyll" (MacDowell), "Lullaby" (Monna Zucca), "Little Grey Home in the West," and a very charming semi-popular number by her accompanist, Victor Young, entitled "When I Met You," has been received with more than passing favor and repetitions requested.

Mlle. Verlet has always been a big favorite in Canada, and her appearances in Montreal have never been less than triumphs. Her tour this autumn has been very successful, and the ending of the war has brought to her, as to many others exiled from home, great peace of mind, which is reflected in the beautiful singing she is doing this season.

HANS HESS PRAISED AT THE ROCKFORD MENDELSSOHN CLUB OPENING CONCERT

This was the third appearance of Mr. Hess in Rockford. Time has but added to the cellist's fame and achievements and his numbers yesterday were finished and artistic in the highest sense. Mr. Hess brought with him a rare old cello which has recently come into his possession and of which he speaks with evident pride and delight, a creation by Carlo Bergonzi in 1751 Cremona. Mr. Hess draws from his cello a rich full tone and with his ample technique and warmly musical temperament he reveals all the beauty of his widely varied numbers. He played it as a maestro. The simple dignity of Mercello Sonata to which he added one of his most delightful numbers, the Boellmann Variations for his first group. To the Kol Nidrei, which introduced the second group, Mr. Hess added a charming Rondo by Boccherni, Adagietto by Loomis and a gay melody by Popper. A happy climax was reached in the Allegro from the Lalo concerto and the applause which would not cease brought one of the gems of the program, when he graciously added the Berceuse.

To Mr. Hess' splendid artistry was added the faultless and most finished accompaniments of Mrs. Hess. The pianist is an accomplished artist and as accompanist to her husband she adds the complete symmetry of the compositions.—Rockford Morning Star, October 10, 1919.

WILL THE MAGAZINES BE FORCED TO MOVE FROM CHICAGO AND NEW YORK TO SMALLER CITIES?

The New York music magazines are, at present, either suspended or very much delayed in publication on account of the labor situation in that city; and all other magazines, weekly and monthly, are seriously affected also.

Some of them have already moved away from New York and others are considering that step.

In Chicago the situation is not so bad as in New York, but the cost of production is so great that there is, at present, no possible chance of any profit whatever in the publication of a paper devoted to music, or any other of the fine arts or educational interests.

All these factors were hard hit by the war, and although recovery to normal conditions is now well under way it will not be complete for months and the time when these interests will begin to share in the unusual prosperity, which has even now overtaken some branches of business, is still far in the distance.

For music, the first to suffer from the shock of war or other untoward conditions, is also the very last to recover.

It follows then that extortionate demands of the labor unions cannot be met by papers of this class, and when they reach a stage of acuteness such as that now prevalent in New York, there is nothing to do but to suspend the publications. The printers can pass the burden along to the publishers, but the latter cannot transfer it to the advertisers and the subscribers.

It is to be hoped, therefore, that the unreasonable demands will stop—both in New York and Chicago, short of that impossible point which would be just as disastrous a point for the printers and engravers as it would be for the publications themselves—for, of what use would it be to demand enormous pay for a certain class of work if there was none of that work to be done?

The Editor of Musical America, which is one of the New York music papers hard hit by present conditions in New York, printed in the last issue of that paper the following characteristic and significant editorial:

A Crisis in the Printing Industry

On October first, by the time this issue is in the hands of its subscribers and readers, a strike the most serious the printing industry has ever known will most likely have been declared. It will mean that in the New York district no publication or book will be isued, except the daily papers, which have an agreement, it seems, with the printing unions that lasts till June of next year.

The printers demand a 44 hour week, which alone would mean an immediate addition of 12 per cent to the existing cost. Besides this they also demand a raise of $14.00 a week to each member of the unions. There are also numerous other demands concerning overtime, work on holidays, color work, etc., etc. These demands, it must be remembered, come on top of all the other concessions that have been made from time to time, especially during the war period, and would virtually mean that the press feeder would receive a salary of $50.00 a week to begin with, and all the other printers, typesetters, pressmen and others, proportionately larger sums.

If the employing printers meet these demands they will pass the new burden to the publishers of periodicals. That would mean the complete elimination of the small margin of profit which has remained as a result of the constantly increasing cost of every item which enters into the production of a periodical; in fact it would result in ruinous and prohibitive conditions under which the average publisher could not exist in business.

The organization of publishers has offered an increase of $6.00 a week on the existing high schedule, and to abide by the arrangement made with the international union of printers to accept the 44 hour week, the same to date from May 1, 1921. This offer of compromise has been flatly rejected by the New York local unions, two of which have broken away from the international union. The New York unions insist that the 44 hour week go into effect at once. Thus they repudiate the agreement made with their own International organization.

A comparison of figures has shown that in twelve leading cities of the United States, $100.00 worth of printing would cost $168.00 in the city of New York. And this additional burden, it must be remembered, comes at a time when the publishers are bending under the weight of greatly increased cost of paper, of cuts, the greatly increased cost and trouble of the Zone Postal law, with all its restrictions, and poor postal service.

It comes at a time, too, when the editors, reporters, writers and correspondents for the various periodicals, while generously loyal to their jobs and their employers, have a natural right to consideration, owing to the greatly increased cost of living. It comes, too, at a time when every business in the publishing industry has been heavily taxed on its income, its profits.

What is the result?

The publishers of over 160 periodicals, weeklies, monthlies, books, have unitedly determined to suspend publication indefinitely until the printing situation is "stabilized."

Practically, the New York unions have broken away from the international brotherhood and, spurred on by the radical element, have determined, as all true friends of organized labor must regret, to go the limit. They have forgotten that after all is said and done the job, as it has been called, can stand only so much, and that when they make demands which make it impossible for the publisher and printer to make both ends meet, they virtually kill the job.

They have also forgotten that publications of any similar character and standing are conducted on the basis of contracts with subscribers and advertisers which must be fulfilled at certain specific times, at certain specific prices. So that not only are their demands unreasonable in themselves and beyond the power of the publishers to grant, but they are formulated without giving the publishers even the physical time to adjust their business to a new condition of cost.

No one believes more thoroughly in the right of labor to organize, to collective bargaining, than we do. No one believes more thoroughly that the working man is entitled not only to a fair, but a good living, that he is also entitled to the opportunity and power for reasonable, healthful recreation, in every form. But at the same time we cannot but express our conviction that the radical element in the labor unions has lost its head and is now driving things to an issue which threatens to deprive organized labor of the good will and the sympathy which it has won.

It seems that 90 per cent of all the periodicals published in this country, outside the daily press, are printed and published in the city of New York, where we have the best equipped printing plants and take them as a whole, the most intelligent, capable printers. Unfortunately, carried away by the successes which they have won in the way of securing better terms as well as more wages, the conservative element in the unions has been overborne by the radical element.

What will be the outcome?

Already the movement is on foot on the part of the publishers of the great magazines of national circulation to move their publishing and mailing departments from New York. This will no doubt be considered by the leaders of the unions as mere talk, bluff, but the discovery of the wholly disproportionate cost of printing in New York to what it is in other cities, can have no other result.

The publishers are going to leave New York City, so far as the mechanical department of their business is concerned, whether there is a strike or no strike.

Enterprise will always seek the place where it can secure the best terms, and above all, something like stable and decent conditions to work with.

Before the close of 1920 the largest publishing houses, the largest printing plants, will have left the city of New York. Within three years no publication of any standing or circulation, outside the daily press, will be printed and issued from the city of New York. This will affect millions on millions paid in wages and twenty-five to thirty-five thousand wage earners.

There is nothing that now can stop the movement, which has been brought about through the inconsiderate action of what we believe to be after all only a small element in the unions, and which we do not believe is really endorsed by organized labor, as such. For we are of those who are profoundly convinced that the great majority of the wage earners are just as fair, just as intelligent, just as disposed to do the right thing as are the great majority of their employers. It is sad, however, to have to realize that in these times of strain and stress, reason and justice seem to have given way to the cry of the agitator, who says: "Grab all you can and let your employers 'pass the buck' to the purchasing public."

Out of this crisis, the greatest the publishing and printing industry has ever faced in New York, will come better conditions. Relieved from the restrictions of the arbitrary rulers of the unions, the publishers will be able to work to better advantage. And the printers, the wage earners themselves, will be able to live under better conditions. For they, too, will be relieved from the strain of the high cost of living, the profiteering of selfish landlords, the strikes and the interruption to traffic and transportation which threaten to make life in New York unbearable.

For these reasons, whatever happens, we ask the consideration and patience of our subscribers, readers, advertisers. We shall do our part to the best of our ability, in maintaining our organization, in issuing our publication and in carrying out our contracts, to the extent that it is humanly possible.

JOHN C. FREUND.

The Literary Digest Solves a Problem

The following item is copied from the Chicago Tribune of last Monday morning:

LITERARY DIGEST OUT; NO TYPESETTERS EMPLOYED

New York, Oct. 12.—[Special.]—The possibilities of publishing a magazine without the use of typesetters became apparent today when a copy of the issue of Oct. 18 of the Literary Digest, just off the press, was exhibited. The entire magazine, comprising eighty pages, is printed from plates made by photographing the original typewritten copy.

The new form in which the Literary Digest appears is the result of an attempt to print a magazine by dispensing entirely with the need of setting type. Each page is in effect a photographic copy of the original article as written on the typewriter.

In a truly Metropolitan fashion, the local musical season will open on the evening of October 13 with a performance of "L'Oracolo" and "Cavalleria Rusticana" by the Scotti Opera Company, this being the first number on Mrs. McCoy's Artist Course, which will include this year such prominent names as Anna Case, Josef Hofmann, Albert Spalding, Reinald Werrenrath, Pablo Casals and Sophie Braslau. For the past eight years Mrs. McCoy has managed courses which have been noted for their excellence, but the present year bids fair to surpass all previous seasons, both as to quality and quantity of world-renowned artists, for in addition to her regular course, Mrs. McCoy will manage several other big musical events, plans for which are now pending.

Mr. Henry B. Vincent, director of the Community Playhouse, announces some interesting and ambitious plans for the coming year. The Community Chorus will again be a prominent factor of the present season with a performance of the "Messiah" about Christmas time as the most important work of the year. The Community Opera Company has already begun rehearsals for "Pinafore" with Mary Quinn, Jane Feist, Roy Blanchard and other local singers in the cast. "The Mikado" is also listed for performance during the winter. As in previous years, groups of short plays will be given at the Community House from time to time.

The Music Department of the Woman's Club, with Miss Lois Berst in charge, will take up the study of French Music and "Americanization in Music," and the chorus, under Miss Berst's direction, will do several important works, which have not as yet been announced. During the Christmas holidays a pageant will be given appropriate to the season.

Mr. Leo Ornstein, the well-known pianist, will appear in recital at the Park Theater Sunday afternoon, October 12, under the local direction of the Winter Piano Company.

Mr. Peter Le Sueur, principal of the Erie Conservatory and director and organist at St. Paul's Cathedral, reports a large enrollment at the conservatory, with numerous recitals listed for the coming winter. At the church he will continue giving his weekly organ recitals preceding the evening service. The choir will sing the following works during the present year: Portions of "The Messiah," Spohr's "Last Judgment," Sterndale-Bennett's "Woman of Samaria," and Stainer's "Crucifixion."

The choir of Luther Memorial Church, under the leadership of Ernest C. Parshall, will give a performance of Henry B. Vincent's "Prodigal Son" about the first of November, with the regular soloists—Mrs. Homer Kendall, soprano; Miss Julia Karch, contralto; Mr. Parshall, tenor, and Mr. Harold E. Titus, bass—singing the leading parts.

At the First Methodist Church, Mrs. Marion Blanchard-DeGraw directress, an interesting program is outlined for the year, the outstanding feature of which will be a rather pretentious rendition of the pageant, "The Wayfarer," which was given at the Methodist Centenary in Columbus last summer. Miss Alma Haller, the organist, will give a series of organ recitals.

The quartet of the First United Presbyterian Church, which is composed of Faith Argyle McCormick, soprano; Mrs. La Mont Feist, contralto; Bruce Morrison, tenor, and Roy Blanchard, bass, is preparing for a concert to be given in the early winter, the chief number of which will be Cadman's cycle, "The Morning of the Year." Albert H. Dowling Jr., organist and director of music at the First United, will continue his monthly organ recitals, the first of which will be given Sunday, October 5.

At the present writing all Erie is greatly agitated over the campaign which is being carried on to secure funds to build an armory, to be used as a convention and concert hall. Erie has stood in great need of just such an auditorium for a great many years, and the outcome of the present campaign undoubtedly will be an important factor in Erie's musical growth.

Grace Brune Marcusson

Recent comment:

Mme. Marcusson is a soprano whose excellent voice charmed her hearers. She has dramatic powers that greatly assist in her work and is also possessed of a beautiful personality.—New York Herald.

Mme. Grace Brune-Marcusson, the Chicago soloist, has a voice of great clearness, flexibility and birdlike quality. She sang seven lovely ballads to which the thrilling sweetness of her voice was particularly suited.—Cleveland (Ohio) Plain Dealer.

Mme. Marcusson, in a voice of exquisite quality and range, sang the aria from La Boheme. She captivated the audience.—Grand Rapids (Mich.) Herald.

Mme. Marcusson has one of the loveliest voices ever heard in Portland. It is a pure soprano of remarkable flexibility and is evenly balanced thruout, something very unusual in a high soprano.—Portland (Ore.) Journal.

The program was admirably chosen and suited to display the vocal equipment and wide culture of the artist. Mme. Marcusson's number, "Hear Ye, Israel," from Elijah, was given a notable rendition, purity and sweetness of quality being combined with remarkable flexibility in the upper register. The group of songs served to display the many beauties of the voice and the versatility of the singer.—Rockford (Ill.) Republic.

Ernest Davis in Maine

Ernest Davis, the popular big tenor, scored an ovation at the Maine Festival on his appearance with Mme. Alda October 3. The critic of the Bangor Daily News went into raptures over Davis' work. After due appreciation of Alda's work, the Bangor Daily News says:

"The appearance of Alda, which was enough alone for any one concert program, was only a part of the richness and abundance which Director Chapman had provided for the patrons of the Friday night concert at the Auditorium. Another star, and the word is used in no idle way, was presented in the person of Ernest Davis, who sang for his programmed number Celeste Aida, from the opera "Aida" by Verdi, in which he scored an arousing ovation. He responded with three encore numbers of which the audience seemed to never grow weary.

"Davis has a beautiful voice and a thrilling range, and he sings with rare charm and genuine interpretation. His stage presence is commanding and he has a magnificent voice under perfect control and sings with the most excellent taste and with great ability.

"While Davis seems fitted for operatic work, both by the tonal qualities of his voice and the lyric dramatic qualities of tone, he also finds himself well adapted for the concert stage, and his work here was most commendable from every standpoint. But the appealing thing about his buoyant personality is a whole-hearted enthusiasm and excellent idea of dramatic values that gives convincing and genuine portrayal to his histronic numbers. He sings the music of Verdi as none have sung it here with the possible exception of Hippolito Lazaro, the great Spanish tenor, who made such wonderful success at the last festival.

"Director Chapman has done to Bangor and the people of eastern Maine, by bringing here such an array of artists as he has done this year, an inestimable boon, and not a small part is due for his excellent judgment in adding to that long array of capable musicians such an artist and wonderful tenor as Ernest Davis."

Orchestra Plans

Certain new and far-reaching plans for the Chicago Orchestra were made known yesterday in connection with Mr. Stock's return. In continuance of the policy pursued for several seasons of furthering in every way possible the development of the American composer, a scheme is being worked out which it is believed will prove of even more practical benefit to our native creative talent than has the adopted plan of giving frequent public performance to American compositions. Mr. Stock proposes to hold a series of manuscript rehearsals at given intervals during the winter, either he or Mr. DeLamarter directing. At these rehearsals manuscript compositions by native writers will be played through and thus afford their authors a chance to hear in actual performance just what they have produced. They thus will be able to judge whether or not the effects they have wished to secure are really "there" or whether they exist only on paper. Composers are invited to submit scores which they wish thus played, sending them to Mr. Stock at Orchestra Hall.

The success of the "popular" concerts has been so pronounced that not only will they be continued, but an additional series called children's programs is to be offered. These will be given at monthly intervals throughout the season either on an afternoon or a Saturday morning and the selections will be such as children and young people will enjoy and which will tend to educate them to appreciation of the more serious symphonic music they will be expected to hear in later years.—Chicago Tribune.

May Peterson Wins Hearts of Music Lovers

May Peterson won a permanent place in the hearts of Tacoma music lovers.

With her sweet, clear voice and unaffected manner Miss Peterson, Metropolitan Opera House star, literally took the audience by storm. The mild evening made the great amphitheater delightful, while the audience was brought to an appreciative frame of mind by the Tacoma Symphony Orchestra, which, under the direction of John Henry Lyons, played some spirited and entertaining numbers between 7:45 and 8.

However, the great treat was the popular singer herself. Not since the appearance of Schumann-Heink in the first of the summer concert series have any artists won their audiences to so great a degree as the magnetic prima donna of last evening's entertainment. Miss Peterson appeared in a chic sport suit of soft blue broadcloth trimmed with fur and wore a huge picture hat. It was a relief to the concertgoers to feel sure their entertainer was comfortably gowned.

"Jag Trot" (old Swedish folk dance) was a most popular number and was sung in a fantastic and unique manner. The Jenny Lind version of the Norwegian Echo Song, as sung by Miss Peterson, had a magnetism all its own and the blending of the vocal and the accompaniment was most skillfully performed. The clear, flute-like tones of her lovely voice found a happy medium in this selection.

Sung by request, "The Land of the Sky Blue Water" was most happily received with hearty applause.

La Gavotte (Manon) from the Opera Comic, the opera in which Miss Peterson gained such noted success abroad, proved an effective number for her range. "Songs My Mother Taught Me" and "La Partida" were heartily encored, which gained from the gracious singer the "Coo Coo Song," sung with a new sprightliness

One of the biggest drawing cards of the evening was "Oh, Whistle and I'll Come to You, My Lad," an old Scotch song which brought whistling from the crowd for several minutes afterward. They were rewarded with "Carry Me Back to Old Virginny," which brought tears to the eyes of many by its tender interpretation and mellow shading of notes.

Herself resembling a lovely rose, the dainty singer, who was weighed down with huge bouquets, proved an inspiration for "The Last Rose of Summer," which was requested, and responded to with unusual vocal expression and great depth of feeling by the artist. Bouquets, large and small, continued to pour into the singer's arms and one wee tot picked her way clear through the rows of machines to make her offering of brilliant red sweet peas and was rewarded with a kiss by the famous lady herself.

Of engaging and magnetic personality, and with a very self-possessed manner, Miss Peterson proved herself an unusually happy entertainer.

If before the last group of songs there was any person in the audience not quite won over to Miss Peterson's magnetism, they were compelled to throw off this feeling when the vivacious artist, seating herself at the grand piano, played and sang in a spirited manner "Comin' Through the Rye" and "Dixie." Perfect enunciation, a beautiful voice and sparkling youth together, make these old songs a joy and inspiration to all.

After the entertainment Miss Peterson was swamped with new admirers and friends previously made in Tacoma when she was here in March.

The Tacoma Symphony Orchestra was especially enjoyed in the "Toreador Song" from "Carmen" and the "Mock Morris Dance" by Grainger. A number of popular songs lent a breezy "jazz" to the selections which were both welcome and entertaining.

Cecil Fanning in San Francisco

[The following article by Alfred Metzger, editor of the Pacific Coast Musical Review of San Francisco, Calif., is from the edition of May 10, 1919, and is relative to the song recital given by Cecil Fanning in San Francisco on May 4.]

If anyone would ask us whom we considered the finest American male concert singer we should unhesitatingly say Cecil Fanning, after hearing him at the Columbia Theater last Sunday afternoon under the direction of Mrs. Jessica Colbert. He not only impressed us as an ideal concert singer, for which impression we shall give reason later on, but his program was so essentially dignified and representative that it stands out as the best concert offered to our public this season. In the first place, Mr. Fanning is the fortunate possessor of a baritone voice of genuine warmth and of a quality unassailably associated with the genuine timbre of such a voice. It is neither a high baritone with dramatic tenor ambitions, nor a basso cantante telescoped into a baritone. It is a real, honest-to-goodness baritone—a voice far rarer than many of our readers would admit in these days of vocal uncertainties.

Another advantage of this splendid vocal organ is its resonant depth, its full, rich and ringing middle register, and its smooth and flexible high tones. Then Mr. Fanning possesses personality and temperament, two absolutely important features of a successful singer. Indeed, his temperament borders on genius, if it does not actually reach it, and we cannot imagine a more impressive, more artistic and more intelligent interpretation of Loewe's Archibald Douglas than the one Mr. Fanning gave us last Sunday.

Added to this astounding temperament is a clear, concise and easily comprehensive enunciation of the English language. If you wish to have English sound pleasing to the ear and just as smoothly and musically as a foreign tongue, listen to Mr. Fanning and try to emulate his example. It is impossible to sing better in English than Mr. Fanning does, and we know whereof we speak. Not the least of Mr. Fanning's numerous artistic advantages is his splendid skill of selecting his programs. He first chose the dramatic or romantic school such as the aria by Gretry and Massenet. Then he gave us a group or delightful French songs by Bemberg and Debussy, which group he concluded with the descriptive declamatory ballad of Loewe's Archibald Douglas, and as conclusion he sang a group of compositions by American composers which were really worth while and represented the best musical creations by leading American masters. He needed not to apologize for his selecting them. A delightful surprise was one of the composer's presence in the audience, thus giving us the pleasure of his personal accompaniment to his song, "The Doeskin Blanket," by Charles Wakefield Cadman, written to words by Cecil Fanning. Both words and music are simply exquisite, and we trust the composition will be popular with our singers. All we can say is that anyone who did not hear Cecil Fanning has missed an opportunity to hear a truly great American artist.

We cannot express all the pleasure received from H. B. Turpin's accompaniments, particularly his smooth and flowing performance of Archibald Douglas. He has a limpid touch, plays with such excellent phrasing and certainty of execution, and seems to be in such splendid rapport with the soloist that the program numbers seemed to be ensemble works, rather than solos with piano accompaniment. Verily any of you who missed the Cecil Fanning program have nothing to be proud of. The program was as follows:

Lucille Stevenson at Lockport

The songs selected by Miss Stevenson were very difficult of rendition and could not have been attempted by a lesser artist. A wonderful legato was evident through all her songs and "Les Silhouettes," by John Alden Carpenter, was delivered in such a manner as to make it one of the most exquisite bits of singing in the Festival.—Prof. Robt. A. Bartholomew, in Lockport Union-Sun and Journal.

Last evening's concert presented Lucille Stevenson, soprano; Edna Gunnar Peterson, pianist; Cecil Burleigh, violinist-composer, and the Rubinstein Chorus of Buffalo. It is always a keen pleasure to hear an artist like Miss Stevenson, who adds to her large vocal endowments and command of vocalization such musical understanding and authority. She always gets into the sense of the songs she sings and makes them vital.—Mary M. Howard in Lockport Union-Sun and Journal.

AMERICAN OPERA AT PARK THEATER, NEW YORK

In announcing the opening of the season of opera by the Society of American Singers at the Park Theater, which begins on Monday, October 13th, with Von Suppe's "Boccaccio," William Wade Hinshaw, general manager, says that it is the hope of the American singers to become a genuine "People's Opera Company" worthy of the stanch support and patronage of music lovers in whatever station of life, and that not only has the program been arranged to give the greatest possible pleasure to the greatest number, but the prices kept so low that no one will be deprived of the opportunity of hearing the splendid repertoire of grand, light and comic operas.

A large coterie of artists of high rank in their several lines, consisting of two full sets of principals, has been engaged, so that both grand opera and comic can be given in alternating fashion throughout the season, the principal roles in every performance being represented by well known grand and comic opera stars.

The repertoire will be taken from three kinds of opera: Grand opera, light opera (opera comique), and comic opera (operettas and opera bouffe), and will include the following works: "Madam Butterfly," "La Boheme," "Faust," "Lohengrin," "Tannhaeuser," "Cavalleria Rusticana," "Trovatore," "Pagliacci," "Haensel and Gretel," "Impresario," "Maid Mistress," "Secret of Suzanne," "Tales of Hoffman," "Boccaccio," "Geisha," "Chimes of Normandy," "La Mascotte," "Robin Hood," "Fencing Master," and eight Gilbert and Sullivan operas—"Yeoman of the Guard," "Princess Ida," "Mikado," "Pinafore," "Iolanthe," "Patience," "Gondoliers" and "Pirates of Penzance." Every opera will be given in English and special stress laid upon the clarity of diction of all artists.

The following artists will appear in the various operas:

Sopranos, Mezzos and Contraltos—Gladys Caldwell, Elizabeth Campbell, Fely Clement, Kate Condon, Marcella Craft, Blanche Duffield, Lucy Gates, Gladys Gilmore, Dicie Howell, Lady Tsen Mei, Ruth Miller, Helena Morrill, Hari Onuki, Virginia Rea, Ellen Rumsey, Gertrude Shannon, Irene Shirley, Cora Tracy, Grace Wagner.

Tenors—Richard Bold, Ralph Brainard, Craig Campbell, Francis Maclennan, Riccardo Martin.

Baritones and Basses—Morton Adkins, David Bispham, William Danforth, Jack Goldman, Graham Marr, Eugene Martinet, Frank Moulan, Bertram Peacock, John Quine, Henri Scott, Burton Thatcher, Herbert Waterous.

SALVINI'S SCHOLARSHIP OFFERS

Mario Salvini, the eminent Italian vocal instructor of New York, strongly advocates the promotion and development of native talent. He believes that there should be a national conservatory in America, and with the view of fostering and encouraging artistic gifts he is offering scholarships to the value of $2,000. Competent judges will decide who the fortunate winners of the scholarships are to be, and the tests will thus reflect great credit upon successful candidates as well as being of financial benefit in advancing their careers.

Cyrena Van Gordon at Aeolian Hall—Helene Kanders and Maximilian Pilzer at the Hippodrome

That the number of concerts and recitals will exceed the past season no one doubts, and I am beginning to be swamped with announcements which attest an increasing list of debutantes, old favorites, etc., but the importance of a musical season should be judged by the quality of entertainments and entertainers and not by the quantity.

Aeolian Hall opened its doors on Sunday afternoon, October 5, with a song recital by Cyrena Van Gordon, mezzo-soprano of the Chicago Opera Association. The Anglo-Saxons should feel somewhat proud of the fact that they are destined to be vocated for the greater musical arts than opera. The Anglo-Saxons, usually, are possessors of voices adapted for concerts and recitals. A small number of them are really fit to cope with the operatic requirements. Cyrena Van Gordon belongs to the latter class, and few operatic exponents are happy in the recital rooms. Miss Van Gordon will always, as long as her voice lasts, be satisfying in operatic interpretations. But to render a recital program requires more than voice. Artistry, interpretation, expression and feeling.

Miss Van Gordon was pleasing as far as the voice was concerned, though off pitch singing was not absent, but, "Come, Beloved," by Handel, had everything save the spiritual expression. "L'Heure Exquise" by Polderiski was the most pleasurable rendition of the French group. The program, save for "Coucher de Soleil," "Le Irefle a quatre femilles" (Rene Lenormand) and "Tes Yeux" (Rene Rabey) was not pretentious. Miss Gordon's French enunciation is equal to an Italian's English diction. The program was opened with Bishop's "Should He Upbraid," followed by "Pastoral" (Carey); "O Mio Fernando" ("Favorita" by Donizetti), an aria not welcome in concerts. "A Toast" by Salter, "In the Steppe" (Gretchaninou) "Moonlight and Dreaming" (Cesare Sturani), "The Last Hour" (Walter Kramer), "Doushka," (Henry Hadley), and was concluded with a group by the accompanist, Charles Gilbert Spross. There was a fair attendance and Miss Gordon made a beautiful stage picture.

At the Hippodrome, simultaneously with the Aeolian Hall, the doors were thrown open for a concert arranged for the benefit of the Humanitarian League. The huge auditorium could have held a larger audience, but one is rather inquisitive about the cause of the limited number present at this event. Either the Humanitarian League is not a popular organization or Mr. Ossip Gabrilowitch is no drawing card. Rather the latter, because the League featured him as a box office test. When I entered the Hippodrome Mr. Gabrilowitch was playing exquisitely "Sonate," op. 27 (Beethoven) and then followed Mr. Baklanoff of the Chicago Opera Association. His singing of the prolog from "Pagliacci" was characterized by affectations for "effects" which were not of commending nature. The short breath, the off key singing and the tremolo could not entitle him to praise. Helene Kanders was heard by the writer for the first time. She had no difficulty in convincing her hearers of an excellent lyric voice, clear in the upper register, and powerful enough to cope with the size of the Hippodrome. Except for temporary off pitch, she was indeed delightful in the "Song of Russia" by Rachmaninoff. Also in the Hopak song by Moussorgsky she was at home, singing the above in the original language. Possessed of a striking personality, Miss Kanders will rapidly gain admirers.

Maximilian Pilzer, we hope, will appear more often this season. If Mr. Gabrilowitch's qualities as a soloist are undeniable, one can not be as enthusiastic about his support in sonata renditions with violin. Mr. Pilzer's musicianship carried him to a successful interpretation of Franck's "Sonata." Without the pianist's support he would have been able to bring out the noble melody of the Franco-Belgian composer. The violinist showed many gifts in the execution of Brahm's "Hungarian Dance No. 2" "Serenade" (Drigo-Auer), and "Caprice Basque" by Sarasate. His technic is superb, the tone is large and the intonation always correct. He was accompanied at the piano by his talented sister. The program was a generous one and each interpreter had the choice of his own accompanist. Emil Polak officiated for Mr. Baklanoff, Lazar Weiner for Mr. Woolf, who was also one of the soloists in the capacity of the cantor, and Paul Eisler for Helene Kanders.

Robert Schmitz Is to Play With the Boston Symphony Orchestra

What seems to be an interesting feature for the coming season is the announcement that the brilliant French pianist is to be the soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, conductor, on February 13. The date of his appearance is not quite certain, but it is most important to record Mr. Schmitz's appearance with the Hub Symphony. Another striking feature of his appearance is the appreciation of Mr.

"Shanewis" to Tour?"

With no intention of divulging a secret a friend told me, quite innocently, that Cadman's superb Indian opera "Shanewis" is to be featured this season before American audiences and especially in those communities which have not yet had the fortune to listen to Mr. Cadman's work. The Franco-American Association for Musical Art is to be the sponsor of "Shanewis," I am told. And, by the way, what has become of that American organization whose purpose was to produce English operas for the furthering of American music? A list of patrons was announced, among them Messrs. Otto H. Kahn, Reginald De Koven, John Philip Sousa and others.

If this "Shanewis" presentation is the first step towards the accomplishment of a worthy cause, then The Music News applauds it most heartily. It is also whispered that Joseph Carl Breil is to direct an operatic company consisting of Anna Fitziu, Riccardo Martin, and others with an elaborate orchestra. If the plans go through successfully, and let us hope they will, the tour is to commence November first.

The Californian's work will not fail to impress the audiences, because "Shanewis" is without doubt an inspiriting opera. Later I was informed that the tour of "Shanewis" is practically assured.

Bernardo Olshansky in Recital

They say that it is much easier to criticise than to sing. But does a vocalist prefer the critic's silence to his constructive reviewing?

Mr. Bernardo Olshansky has so many qualities that it is worth while to analyze his defects. The capital fault of his recital at Aeolian Hall on October 7 was the off-key singing. Possessed of an excellent basso cantante voice, the results of his vocalization would have been more satisfactory had it not been for the flat singing for which one could not blame any teacher. The lower register and the medium are of splendid material, the upper is limited and forced. His falsettos are artistic and employed intelligently and with much effect. Mr. Olshansky is destined to be a welcome factor to the concert halls and with the elimination of his faults he will place himself in the rank of satisfactory recitalists.

His Roumanian group was very pleasing and his singing of it compelled encores. It was a welcome novelty, and after the renditions of the Roumanian folk-lore melodies the large audience rewarded him with warm applause. His program included songs by Haendel, Gluck, Buonamici, Bemberg, Trucco, Marie Bachmann, Bimboni, Lishina, Gretchaninow, Stolipina, Gastaldon, Donaudy, Cecil Forsyth, Waghalter, Jiacchia and Woodman. Perhaps the off-key singing was also due to his accompanist, Mr. Karl Leitner.

Word comes from Rome that the popular baritone of the Metropolitan Opera is at present ill and will not be able to return before November. The New Symphony Orchestra Proves Inferior to the Older Organizations

The initial concert of the season by the New Symphony Orchestra was given on Thursday evening, October 9, at Carnegie Hall.

When the listener was led to the Fifth Symphony of Beethoven he could easily draw comparisons with the older organizations of which Messrs. Josef Stransky and Walter Damrosch are the conductors. The brass instruments of the new organization exhibited, not infrequently, roughness and louder playing than one would care to listen to, the wind and the reed sections displaying lack of finesse, grace and co-ordination. Naturally, it is a difficult task to perfect an ensemble of some one hundred players in such a short time as a few months, but why not wait until some real good ensemble is effected? Meanwhile the glory of the older organizations is still a matter of delight for those who support them. Beethoven, Mozart, and others are what we all know them to be, but their inspiring music must receive consideration from the interpreters. It isn't sufficient to feature Caesar Franck; he must be played and interpreted with the best of the musicians' abilities—if they have any. The Bowery may exploit Wagner, but would the latter, if he were alive, permit the jazzing of his masterpieces? Mr. Arthur Bodansky, also of the Metropolitan, is a capable leader and with his extreme musicianship he will be able to give us better performances. There should be the double quality, or rather the triple "quality," in an orchestral concert. First, a good ensemble of players, second, the leader, and third, a choice program.

Max Rosen in Recital

Still boyish in appearance, but more mature in his art, Max Rosen returned to Carnegie Hall on Saturday afternoon, October 11, for his first recital of the season. One factor, and a potent one, for a youngster especially, was the capacity house present to greet the return of a favorite violinist. He was heard by the writer in the "Chaconne" (Vitali). If we return to the accomplishment of the past two seasons it is only because one likes to record the strides made. The third season finds Rosen more equipped for complicated compositions; his technic has grown to the extent where praise must be bestowed on his progress. His tone has gained in volume, and where the intonation of the past seasons left something to be desired, today he is practically a new violinist but fully qualified to rank with the best of the younger set. Notwithstanding that the "Concerto F Sharp Minor" by Ernst was not all accurately rendered, he gave otherwise an exhibition of technic which was admirable for the agility and the facility in overcoming difficult passages. In both executions he displayed poise, assurance and a mastery which insure his future. Besides several encores his program consisted of "Pastorale" (Scarlatti-Franko), "Mazurka" (Chopin-Kreisler), "La Gitana" (Kreisler), Romanze E Minor (by himself) and "Scherzo Bizarre" (Victor Kuzdo). Demonstrative approval was tendered and it was fully deserved. Frederic Persson gave an admirable accompaniment at the piano.

GOOD SINGING DEMANDS ITALIAN ARTICULATION, DECLARES MME. JOSTY-HAMMOND

Born in Italy, of French parentage, Mme. Josty-Hammond, the New York vocal teacher, enjoyed from the beginning unusual advantages. Her success as a singing teacher is attributable, she says, to insistence upon a perfect enunciation of Italian vowels as a basis of correct tone production in any language.

"In this day of vocal mutilation, where words are so often indistinguishable," declared Mme. Josty-Hammond to a representative of Musical America, "it is a real delight to enter a studio where every syllable is clear to the auditor.

"In speaking or singing Italian articulation is imperative. There is no possibility of slighting the vowels, as is so commonly done in other tongues, and this very largely accounts for the beautiful singing of the Italians. I, therefore, employ 'la lingua Italiana' as the very foundation of singing, and this enunciation, properly applied, enables one to sing with equal effect in all languages and removes the strain and compression which so often destroy the color of the tone. It produces a clearness and freedom of sound that cannot otherwise be attained. One cannot question the virtue of the method, for unimpeded emission necessarily signifies an open throat, and flexible tongue.

"The latter, operating upon a well-supported breath," continued Mme. Josty-Hammond, "produces that warmth and penetration so peculiar in the Italian voices. There is no physiological difference between the Latin and the American construction and the same laws apply to both. It is these laws that I apply to American singers and demonstrate convincingly their infallibility. My pupils are indeed standing proof of their efficacy, as was shown in the recital last spring at Carnegie Hall. There is in my studio no singing of arias by beginners. There is, first of all, a conquest of the underlying fundamentals and then a gradual ascent through the intermediate stages. And it is truly surprising how quickly pupils reach their goal, for there is nothing to unlearn."

Mme. Josty-Hammond anticipates a busy teaching season and has reopened her studios in the Metropolitan Opera House Building with a large enrollment of pupils. She plans to give several recitals during the season.—Musical America.

ANNA IMIG

A young singer who has made a splendid impression at Ann Arbor, Mich., where she was an artist pupil of Theodore Harrison and a member of the faculty of the University School of Music, Anna Imig, mezzo-contralto, has come to Chicago and actively entered the concert and church field of this city and will also teach a small class of vocal pupils.

Mrs. Imig is the possessor of a fine personality and a rare intelligence, and these, together with the exceptional training she has had, have combined to bring her very great success wherever she has appeared, including an appearance as soloist at the May Festival at Ann Arbor two years ago.

Among the early engagements she will fulfil in Chicago are two on November 3, the first being a recital before the Austin Woman's Club in the afternoon, and the second being an appearance in the evening in "Elijah" with the Chicago Apollo Club at Orchestra Hall.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY

The concert last Saturday afternoon of the American Conservatory at Kimball Hall was one not soon to be forgotten. It was given by Hugh Porter, organist, and John T. Read, basso, with Miss Esther Hirschberg at the piano.

Mr. Porter was in splendid tune and handled the none too tractable organ with a master hand. He evinced a remarkable technique, an accurate memory and quick perception in the management of his instrument, especially in his brilliant closing numbers, the Schubert "Marche Militaire," which takes clever registration as well as technical facility, and the Widor Symphonie No. 5, which is tremendous in its requirements.

Mr. Read sang with style and good interpretation. His work is always most sincere and musicianly. The program is appended:

Marche aux Flambeaux ..... Guilmant
Andante from Sonata IV ..... Bach
Mr. Porter
Belshazzar ..... Schumann
At Midnight ..... Bruch

ERNEST DAVIS IN CHICAGO

Ernest Davis, the splendid young American tenor, who made his first successes in Chicago and who is now one of the most popular of the younger generation of singers in New York City, having just completed an important engagement at the Maine Festivals, is in Chicago and vicinity for two weeks, where he will sing in a number of the Frank Morgan Extension concerts.

From Chicago he will go to St. Louis, Minneapolis (Apollo Club), Winnipeg, Can., and Montgomery, Ala., after which, in December, he will return to New York, where before the close of the season he will have two recital appearances.

THE CAMEO CLUB

Chicago responds but stonily to anything of the musically Bohemian order and yet a few such organizations as the newly formed Cameo Club could do wonders in lightening up the austerity of the situation and establishing that cordiality among musicians of the city which has been so conspicuous through the years by its absence.

And, undoubtedly also, one has but to attend a single meeting of the Cameo Club in order to be impressed with its desirability and the fact that it is vitally different.

This being true, there is every reason to think that it will be a rapidly growing institution and that its success will be the impetus which will mean the inauguration of other such ventures.

The second meeting was held last Friday evening at the studios of Elizabeth Guion Dormer at 1142 Michigan Avenue and it proved to be a rare delight to the select company present at that time.

It was called "An Oriental Evening" and was devoted to Japanese and Chinese music and literature, with about an equal division of program between the two countries.

There was, first, a "Greeting" from the President of the New York Cameo Club, read by Lida Leighton Jones, and there was also an Oriental play, "The White Emblem," written by Joseph Le Roy Dennee, and read with much style and correct feeling by Elizabeth Guion Dormer, who as President also presided throughout the meeting with charm and authority.

ELIZABETH GUION DORMER

The big item of the evening, however, lay in the address by Ida Mansfield Wilson on "Japan."

As Mrs. Wilson has been to the Land of the Rising Sun three times and has had exceptional opportunities to study its people and customs, and as she is herself a woman of charm and skill, she succeeded in pleasing the little audience mightily and in making them wish for "more," even though it was nearly 11 o'clock when she had finished her illuminative and illustrated talk.

Mr. and Mrs. Dey M. Hough read some Chinese poems delightfully, Otoya Mitzuki, a Japanese baritone residing in Chicago, sang some songs in his native tongue, and some of the Fay Foster Japanese song pictures in English with very good effect.

Miss Sadie Vanderbosch gave a pleasing operatic touch to her rendition of "One Fine Day," from "Madame Butterfly," and besides playing good accompaniments throughout Mrs. Edward Miller played some little Chinese sketches very adroitly on the piano.

The rooms reflected the fine taste of Mrs. Dormer in their quaint and charming decoration, and many of the guests were in full Chinese or Japanese dress.

There were burning joss-sticks all about—the lights were properly subdued, and altogether there was "atmosphere" as well as real values and the function throughout proved conclusively that the Cameo Club has brains and talent a-plenty among its members and that, with time to grow, it will become a standard institution of the art life of Chicago.

THE CLARK TEACHERS' AGENCY

We have a number of desirable vacancies for young Men and Women with high grade AMERICAN TRAINING. Pianists-Vocalists-Violinists. Teachers must be able to meet keen competition, willing to do their best and capable people who are "on the job." These opportunities offer splendid salaries and are altogether exceptional.

The Elderly Person

It is appropriate to speak of Clarence Eddy as a veteran, but more because of the fact that he began very early, and by that token has won the honors of years before Father Time has crusted him very markedly with the rime which falls inexorably from the hour glass. Mr. Eddy is of the type which most men seek to emulate. When ripeness draws near, a clear-headed man eagerly desires to radiate vigor, sound health, alertness, directness of speech, method of movement, poise, keen vision, steady nerves, good judgment, easy motion, abounding humor, kindliness of thought and action, patient consideration and generosity, and then house them all in a compact, sturdy figure which stands guard over the inner man, so guiding and influencing the outer one. That is the sort of veteran Mr. Eddy has grown into. True, some of us remember the days when there was a long, silky, brown beard of much fineness of texture, in place of the crisp gray mustache now cultivated, and, like a lot of other people, he holds his own best with his hat on. But no years can alter that firm set of head upon erect shoulders and the clearness of his glittering eyes, which see a long way forward and deep down, and are wary or cordial, as the wisdom of the moment dictates.

A long-ago memory of him is of a recital which he came to give on a rebuilt organ whereon the Elderly Person was holding a sort of pioneer outpost. The reconstruction was in the care of good old Octavius Marshall, of blessed memory among Western organists. Marshall knew his man pretty well when he wagered that the first thing Mr. Eddy would do would be to pull out a pocket rule and measure the height of the bench and call Marshall down because it was one inch too high! But that was exactly what happened.

Those were the days of the flowing beard, spoken of, and of extremely fine boots. And, also, when Dubois' "Cantilina Nuptuale" and Shelley's "Russian Romance" were new; when Haupt dictated the speed and rhythm for fugues. They stand also for the way Mr. Eddy still keeps his programs up to the last minute in charm and novelty. His current lists fairly bristle with the new things, just as they did back yonder.

His return to Chicago, as one of the department heads in Chicago Musical College, is occasion for congratulation and opportunity for retrospect. The Elderly Person knew well a fine-grained man who said once: "I don't know whether I count for anything notable otherwise, but I do know that I did a good turn for Chicago when I brought Clarence Eddy to Chicago to play the organ at First Congregational Church out on Ann street." The speaker was the late Philo F. Pettibone, and the year referred to was in the seventies. Shakespeare does say something about the evil which men do living after them, but certainly Mr. Pettibone's memory deserves well for what he discerned wisely as valuable when this old world was newer.

Sitting in the cozy little refuge which Mr. Eddy has touched with his personality until it reflects the intimate color of a home, it was pleasant to talk of these and other names who had their days of usefulness and service in a certain halcyon period for music in Chicago. And then, to go a bit further backward to the beginnings which enabled a very young man to so quickly put his mark on a new community and fit into a wider movement.

It ought not to be surprising to learn that Mr. Eddy played a pipe organ in a service at the age of thirteen. He confessed, with a little laugh, that he remembered even yet the qualms and terror of that inauguration —how his feet trembled so much that the only way he could brace himself was to put his right foot on the balance swell and pedal with his left one. It may be that the boy was not far away from the "one-legged organists" of our later date. Does it grant them absolution? Perhaps they are scared. At fourteen he was an organist and choirmaster in the Massachusetts village which was home. At sixteen he was studying with Dudley Buck in Hartford, and at eighteen playing a three-manual organ in Montpelier, drawing a good salary and pleasing his people so entirely that they were incredulous when he said he would leave them and go to Europe for further study. "Why study any more?" was the quick query. "We will pay you anything you want if you remain on this bench. What more do you need?"

And he was happy at Montpelier, because of the presence at Burlington, not far away, of another young man of his own genus. Together they had the sort of companionship which only the gifted can enjoy and which, while perfectly normal in one way, carries with it the essence of exaltation. Until Samuel P. Whitney met Clarence Eddy the former was plugging away in enthusiastic darkness — making the most of what chances he had. When Eddy unfolded his knowledge of Bach, the ready ears and heart of the other man were open and a friendship ripened which the years never lessened. To hear Mr. Eddy speak of this friend and the many whose names were also uttered is to understand one part of his rich life experience. "The man who would have friends must show himself friendly," and he has known how to make the saying true.

At twenty Mr. Eddy was with August Haupt in Berlin, literally soaking himself at that fountain of erudition, tradition and authority. He brought so much of eagerness and aptitude with him that he absorbed doubly fast. And he won his way so fully that his guide took him into his heart and home. In two years and a half the two had traversed what ordinarily required five years of application. Furthermore, the master told him this for a fact. Which meant, in substance, that the entire literature of Bach had been studied with the greatest authority since the days of the old Cantor himself.

Back in America the Eastern opportunities were finally put aside to accept the promising Western field, with Chicago and First Congregational Church as the starting point. After two years Mr. Eddy went to the First Presbyterian Church, and there remained eighteen years. Nothing was said about it, but the Elderly Person wagers that Philo A. Otis had the penetrating eye to see just what the brilliant young organist would make of the music of that church. And right splendidly did he create tradition in a period when musical history was recording itself in Chicago churches — the very heyday of great quartets as the basis of all effort. They had superb singers in those days. Their fame spread into the interior towns as well. So that when the "Pinafore" delights blossomed, and a "Chicago Church Choir Company" sallied forth the artists were all well known in the field they traversed.

At this time Mr. Eddy was associated with the "Hershey School of Music," and in connection with it, began his series of weekly noon organ recitals. These reached a climax when he gave one hundred successive recitals without repeating any number. At the final one the entire program consisted of new works written for the occasion by eminent composers. It was a great undertaking and has no parallel save as Hugo Goodwin's record of playing one thousand pieces without repetition approaches it. The years established Mr. Eddy as a prominent figure in musical Chicago, and his name and playing became familiar throughout the country. Without doubt he has played in more places than any other organist of these States, although the statement is not made with other than an estimate. And in every place of importance where there is a good organ there is apt to be a good friend for the man so thoroughly friendly. The Elderly Person found himself noting how often his host unconsciously spoke of places and men and added the encomium, "He's a nice fellow; I enjoy going there." On the piano rack there was music, of course. Much of it had that clear script name on it which is another of Mr. Eddy's traits—so direct and easily read. But there was manuscript also, with dedications to the one man who had drawn out something from another. Just how many of these evidences come to him is seen in his programs where a liberal selection of dedicated numbers find place. As happy a part of the Elderly Person's visit as could be noted was when Mr. Eddy showed him these newer things, which afterward graced his first recital in Chicago this season. The insight and pleasure in discovering and enjoying merit will keep such an artist ever young. He enthused, he repeated phrases, he dissected harmonies, he put forward hidden developments, he searched for diverse treatment, he accented choice measures, he sang the richer melodies, he pointed out the study, he scented the atmosphere, and dived into the very soul of the composer and brought his message forth to loving inspection and approval. It is this enveloping spirit which gives his music its unfailing charm. He has absorbed it, understood it and found delight in what he preserves. His is that rare combination—an artistic soul and a good business man. There is always the strength of reserve back of his artistic mood and gracious cordiality. In his type is the nucleus of the best American spirit—the recognition of the absolute need of the esthetics and altruism of life, linked with a sweet reasonableness and cool head which keeps the balance steadfast, sure and sane. You don't often find it.

THE ELDERLY PERSON.

CLEVELAND BOHNET

Cleveland Bohnet, who scored one of the most distinguised successes at Lockport during the recent festival, has resumed his duties as a member of the faculty of the American Conservatory and looks forward to a successful season.

The following are among the many comments which Mr. Bohnet received in commendation of his appearance:

"Cleveland Bohnet, pianist, made a distinctly favorable impression by his playing of some novelties. 'Song of the Mesa,' by Homer Grunn, was atmospheric, and 'The Flute God,' by the same composer, had a plaintive sweetness like the flute song of a dweller long ago in the land of the sky-blue waters. It was charming music delightfully played. Of two ultra-modern tone sketches by C. F. Griffes, 'Lake at Evening' and 'Night Winds,' the former was a clever conceit. Mr. Bohnet's beautiful touch, skillful pedal effects and poetic treatment of the compositions he played made his work most enjoyable."—Mary M. Howard, Buffalo Express.

"A good pianist is always a treat, and Cleveland Bohnet was such a one. The vehicles which Mr. Bohnet chose to display his talents were all in the mo dern, descriptive style. These compositions gave the artist an opportunity to show his great sense of balance of parts. Never boisterous, but always conveying to the audience the feeling of subdued power, Mr. Bohnet held the attention of his listeners throughout all his numbers. 'Night Winds,' by Charles T. Griffes, deserves especial mention, both on account of the excellency of the composition and the true rendition given it by the pianist."—Robert Bartholomew, Lockport Sun-Journal.

CECIL ARDEN SCORES IN SONG RECITAL—EASE AND NATURALNESS WIN LARGE AUDIENCE AT MIZPAH

That Cecil Arden has a great future before her and may yet be a Schumann-Heink or a Louise Homer was the opinion of an audience which filled the Mizpah auditorium when the youthful metropolitan artist appeared in joint recital with Charles Courboin, organist.

The approval of the audience was evidenced by long and enthusiastic applause, which rendered it necessary for Miss Arden to respond again and again. Her voice is full, clear and sweet, and she is the possessor of those two most to be desired attributes, youth and charm. There was nothing of affectation in her manner of delivery. The lovely tones came with ease and naturalness and yet her program showed the result of careful study.

Vol. 11 Chicago, October 24, 1919 No. 43

Editorial

PASSING COMMENT

The question of German language in the United States, either on the concert stage or elsewhere, is one which seems to be taking care of itself very satisfactorily.

Music News has been preaching the gospel of "America First" for a long time, and we still maintain that not only our own artists and our own compositions, but also our own language, should be given first consideration throughout the musical world of America.

The following emphasization of these points by W. L. Hubbard in his music editorial in the Tribune last Sunday is very interesting and significant:

The question, however, is not that of the using or the not using of German music. That anyone truly American in sentiment and ideal did not care during the war to listen to music of German origin was but natural. A people which was heaping so much of suffering, inhumanity and sorrow upon the world could not at that time be mentally associated with a folk capable of producing aught that could afford enjoyment, uplift and beauty. That feeling lingers still in the hearts and minds of many Americans, and its complete passing will require no inconsiderable time, especially where those are concerned whose immediate and personal losses in the wartime have been heaviest.

But the larger general public can afford the more indulgent view. Cherished hatred profits neither individual nor nation. There is no reason why the American music-loving public should be deprived of the masterpieces of German music. There is every reason why it should not be deprived of them; for to deny ourselves of them is to limit our knowledge and our appreciation.

The message any music gives is largely if not wholly a question of the suggestion received from it by its hearer. And that suggestion depends upon the hearer's mental and emotional experiences, which experiences in turn form, when coupled with the immediate mood, his susceptibility and his receptivity. German music, therefore, needs mean only that which its hearer makes it mean. And to the majority of listeners it must contain chiefly beauty and uplift. The great treasure of German music should be kept open to us. To deny ourselves its riches would be to hamper and impoverish ourselves. All the instrumental music of Germany should be at our disposal. All its opera and all its song literature should be ours to use and to judge.

But, while we should welcome German music, there is no reason why the American public should be asked to listen to the German language. That idiom stands at the present time as too synonymous for that which has been hurtful to humanity, both individually and collectively, for the world to care to hear it. We have our own language, and now is the time for us to come to a realization of its worthiness as the medium of art expression and insist upon its using. The time is ripe, in fact, for the doing away with all foreign tongues on the concert and opera stages. The French, the Italian, the Russian, the Scandinavian—all stranger languages—were well banished, not because they are not languages of worth and of beauty, but because for us they are foreign, and we as an English-speaking people should have songs and opera sung for us in the language we understand. German should be banished for an especial and well-grounded reason, but all other foreign speech must also disappear from our entertainment halls if we ever are to become genuine and intelligent appreciators of grand opera and of the great song literature of the world.

There is much food for thought in the following comment, which made its way to our office last week:

> "The way to get rich is to get money; the way to get money is to get business; the way to get business is to get after it."—Frank H. Kimbrough, Muncie, Ind.

"An innovation in the use of translated folk songs as an Americanization medium was introduced successfully at a Columbus Day meeting held at Public School No. 95, New York, under the auspices of Greenwich House, for the Italian residents in the neighborhood of that settlement. The singing, which was under the direction of War Camp Community Service, included not only some of the American popular and patriotic songs, but three Italian songs, 'Santa Lucia,' 'O Sole Mio,' and 'Funiculi-Funicula.' Frederick Gunther, the prominent bass-baritone, and now a War Camp Community Service song leader, told the audience that Americans liked to sing their Italian songs, and he asked their help in singing them in English. The words were then thrown on the screen, first in Italian and then in English, and the crowd sang the songs in English even better than in their own tongue. That they were pleased by the use of their own folk songs was shown by the outburst of applause at the end of this group. Magistrate Freschi, who spoke on the advantages of learning English, urged the boys in the audience to bring their parents to night school to explain to them all about this meeting and to tell them that they had sung the Italian songs in English. Judge Freschi declared that this use of the folk songs was one of the finest Americanization methods that he had seen."

The rumor that "Shanewis," Charles Wakefield Cadman's fine opera, is to be given wider circulation this season is most gratifying.

We should certainly like to hear it in Chicago—preferably in our own season at the Auditorium, but, if that be not forthcoming—then in some other way.

The audience gathered at Kimball Hall last Tuesday night to hear the organ recital of Clarence Eddy was indeed a distinguished one and a great credit to Chicago.

Mr. Eddy is, easily—the dean of the organ playing profession in America, and when he plays, as last Tuesday—all the organists as well as many musicians of other branches feel it a distinct privilege to be present.

Following are some "sayings" of Andrew Carnegie well worth studying:

(From Carnegie's "Empire of Business")

The millionaires are the bees of the hive, not the drones.

Capital, business ability and labor must be united in any enterprise.

The fashion of trusts has but a short season longer to run.

It is infinitely easier for a young, practical man of ability to obtain an interest in existing firms today than ever before.

Subdivision, specialization is the order of the day.

The habit of thrift constitutes one of the greatest differences between the savage and the civilized man.

I have never yet met a man who fully understood two different kinds of business.

The millionaire who toils on is the cheapest article which the community secures at the price it pays for him, namely, his shelter, clothing and food.

REMARKABLE SEAT SALE FOR THE OPERA

On Tuesday and Wednesday of last week the Chicago Opera Association sold $25,000 worth of seats. There was a last-minute rush to buy subscriptions before the increase of prices, which went into effect Saturday, October 18.

W. C. Meek, treasurer of the Chicago Opera Association, worked night and day with a corps of four assistants to keep track of the orders that poured in.

"We have been rushed off our feet," he said when seen at the Auditorium. "The fact is, we are going to have a wonderful year. 'The Friends of Opera' have stimulated the sale of boxes, and the newspapers, with their hearty co-operation, have made our advance sale the biggest in the history of the organization."

COLUMBIA SCHOOL FACULTY MEMBER RETURNS

Among the number of young musicians in the Columbia School of Music who answered the call to service for Uncle Sam during the war was Arthur Oglesbee, who has just returned from abroad and will resume his teaching in the school.

ARTHUR OGLESBEE

Mr. Oglesbee had the unusual advantage in France of attending the University Mountpellier, where he studied for some time. His musical training was developed under the tutelage of Clare Osborne Reed, director of the Columbia School, where he was awarded his degree of Bachelor of Music in 1911. Mr. Oglesbee is a well-rounded musician and has won a high place in the professional world through his many public appearances and from the exceedingly interesting compositions written by him for piano and voice as well as a number of choruses for women's voices which have been produced in public in the concerts given by the Columbia School Chorus under the direction of Louise St. John Westervelt.

HAZEL DELL NEFF

A singer whose addition to the ranks of the Chicago artists is a matter for sincere congratulation, is Hazel Dell Neff, soprano, who was soloist for the past two years in one of the largest Pittsburgh churches, and who has toured throughout the middle west in concert, besides making various successful appearances in oratorio in Chicago and other cities.

Miss Neff is a musician of rare intelligence and to beautiful voice and good personality has added extensive repertoire and an interpretative ability which has under it broad and far-reaching culture.

From an attractive circular which is used by Miss Neff we cull the following facts:

"'Hazel Dell' is the title of an old ballad our grandparents sang years ago. Miss Neff's parents loved the old song and named their little daughter after it, hence Hazel Dell Neff, soprano. With such a beginning and such a nom de guerre, Miss Neff ought to be and is an artist and singer.

"She has studied and coached the oratorios with Mr. H. W. Owens, Chicago. None know the traditions better than the Welsh.

HAZEL DELL NEFF

She built her repertoire with that master of diction, elegance, polish, style and refinement in singing, Herman Devries, the celebrated operatic coach.

"Miss Neff's voice is a lyric soprano, pure as a mountain stream, warm as a spring zephyr, and as colorful as a rainbow. She has the real prima donna quality and a fluency and flexibility that are a genuine delight in florid arias.

"Her repertoire contains the soprano roles of the standard oratorios and leading operas, as well as from the classic song literature of the various national schools. Then, too, she is zealous in including compositions of our native composers.

"Three transcontinental tours, one of the West Indies and Panama, have been made by Miss Neff. She was soloist with the prize winning Haydn Choral Society at the San Francisco and San Diego Expositions. For two seasons she was a member of the Ernest Gamble Concert Party. She was soloist for two years of the Sixth United Presbyterian Church of Pittsburgh, the largest United Presbyterian Church in America."

———###———

SYBIL COMER

Sybil Comer, the very charming soprano, who is featuring Spanish songs in costume this season, added another triumph on October 10, when she gave a program before the Ambrose Woman's Club. She was immediately sought for future dates, which have already been arranged by her manager, Louise Quealy.

Miss Comer is to give the program at the Chicago Athletic Club on December 14.

Sunday she was the soloist at the Mangasarian services at Cohan's Grand, and delighted a huge audience, which demonstrated its pleasure in her singing.

ROSEMARY PFAFF

Rosemary Pfaff, the phenomenally gifted young soprano, who at fifteen has the technic, style and repertoire of a routined prima donna, will leave Chicago on the 15th of November to take up her residence in New York, where she will become a pupil of Mme. Delia Valeri.

This teacher is anxious for her to begin at once, and her family is ready now to make the move to the East, but there is just one thing that is detaining them, and that is the multiplicity of engagements which have been made for Rosemary on the eve of her departure.

Probably no young artist in Chicago—certainly no one so young as Rosemary Pfaff, has ever had so many fine engagements as has she in the course of a year.

Clubs, societies, churches and various other organizations have kept her busy throughout the twelvemonth passed, but now, since it is known that she will so soon go away, there are not days and evenings enough to accommodate all those who wish to engage her.

And it is not alone in the number of engagements made for this young girl that she is unique, but also in the kind of engagements—for, almost every one of her appearances since she came to Chicago have been with liberal payments attached and in some cases her fee has been extraordinary when her age is taken into consideration.

All the many friends she has made here are sorry to have her go to New York, but all unite in good wishes and the hope that her growth there will be steady and as remarkable as it has been here.

Previous to her departure she will fill the following remarkable list of engagements (including those also of the past week or so):

September 26—Catholic Woman's Country Club at Edgewater Beach Hotel.

September 27—At home of Mrs. Warren Raymond Carman (with Lorraine Earnest and Lulu Jones Downing).

October 7—Windsor Park Woman's Club, M. E. Church.

October 8—British-American Woman's Club, English Room, Congress Hotel.

October 10—Scottish Old People's Home (afternoon).

October 10—Forty-seventh Street Hospital (evening).

October 11—Musicale at home of Lulu Jones Downing (with Lorraine Earnest).

October 12—Musicale given by Mr. and Mrs. Price at Surf Hotel.

October 13—Gary (Ind.) Woman's Club.

October 17—Arche Club (at Kenwood Club House).

October 21—Highland Park Woman's Club (at clubhouse).

October 22—For Cardinal Mercier at St. John's (Belgian) Church, singing "Ave Maria" (Bach-Gounod), with Lorraine Earnest, violinist.

At all of these engagements she will be assisted by Barton Bachmann, who indeed has been the accompanist for Miss Pfaff at almost every appearance she has made in a year and who has shared with her in all the successes.

Mr. Bachmann is a splendid solo artist as well as an expert accompanist, and he is also a fine composer.

Rosemary Pfaff has sung some of his songs constantly throughout the past year, and not only has he been much complimented on these pieces, but also on piano solos of his own composition which he has played constantly as well as on a fine repertoire of standard piano compositions which have made him also extremely popular in each one of the concerts given with the brilliant little singer.

AN EXCEPTIONAL CHURCH PROGRAM

Mrs. Irene Belden Zaring is a woman of great initiative, as well as fine executive ability, and to these she adds a sense of artistry which seeks always the best.

It was no surprise, therefore, when she sent out, last week, announcement of an unusual program to be given at the New England Congregational Church, where she is organist, on last Sunday evening, and the response of the public was such that the audience proved to be one distinctly larger and of finer caliber than most which gather on Sunday evenings anywhere.

The chief attraction was Clarence Eddy, whose fame as an organist is international, and who had chosen for this time a very attractive list of pieces, most of which he played at his recent Kimball Hall recital, and which are reviewed elsewhere in this issue of Music News.

Among these was the manuscript arrangement of Gottschalk's "Last Hope," by Karl Theodore Saul, an American writer who has proved himself worthy of perpetuating the lovely melody which went so far toward making the fame of the early American pianist (Gottschalk) and which is one that can no more die than could "Traumerei" or " Last Rose of Summer."

Mr. Saul has done a splendid piece of work in his paraphrase, and as it will doubtless be published, it will certainly become standard in the American repertoire of organ pieces.

"The Holy Boy," an arrangement of a fascinatingly beautiful carol (John Ireland), again held breathless attention, and all the rest of the program, as scheduled in Music News last week, made instantaneous success, in spite of the fact that the New England organ is much out of condition and at this time disclosed the fact that several of the stops are badly out of tune.

Mrs. Zaring has under her care a really fine, though small, Chorus Choir, and at this time this body sang "The City Beautiful," a stirring anthem by Federlein, with spirit and style, being particularly upheld by the brilliancy of the long obligato sung with power and skill by Elsa Kressman, the solo soprano of the choir.

Clarence L. Neu, a basso as yet not much known in Chicago, sang "By the Waters of Babylon" (Howell) in a way to whet the appetite for "more," Mrs. Zaring supplying a remarkably effective accompaniment.

The quartet ensemble included Miss Kressman, Mr. Neu, Barbara Wait and Clark Shipp, these comprising a powerful and artistic ensemble.

The Preiser School of Music

On Friday evening, October 25, will occur the first studio recital of the season, given by pupils of the Preiser School of Music. A very attractive program has been arranged, consisting of vocal, piano, and violin numbers, and several readings. The following pupils will take part: John Barker, Nola E. Johnson, Marie Vandelinder, Signe Elgquist, Hiram Edwards, Alvin Wiersba, Alice Dickson, Marguerite Westphal, Robert Draper, Olive Carson, Rosemary Hancock, Merle Whitted, Marjorie Grandvedt, Bernadine Carlson, Eleanor Nelson, Winston Miller, William Arnt, Einer Sunde, Ruth Donlevy and Marjorie Carr.

A FINE CONCERT AT THE AMERICAN CONSERVATORY

On Saturday afternoon three young teachers of the American Conservatory combined to present a thoroughly attractive concert at Kimball Hall before a capacity audience, which found the work of each of them "very good."

Edna Wilder, the possessor of a lyric soprano voice of sweetness, which she uses with exceptional facility, was heard in the simple "I've Been Roaming" and "Who Is Sylvia?" to fine tonal advantage, and in "The Lass With the Delicate Air" (Arne) she displayed distinct coloratura adaptability of fine quality.

EDNA WILDER

In "Ah, Love, but a Day" (Beach) she approached the dramatic very satisfactorily, and in Speaks' "Morning" rose to real emotionalism.

Her accompaniments were not well played. Charles Mixer, a young violinist with great talent and much skill, played a "Little Song" of D'Ambrosio and "Deep River" with beautiful tonal quality, and in a "Village Dance" (Cecil Burleigh) and the "Spanish Dance," No. 8 (Sarasate), disclosed a very real virtuosity of technic and interpretation.

Nothing daintier than his playing of the "Bird as Prophet" could be imagined, and the song quality of the Charpentier "Melodie" was cello-like in its intensity and breadth.

He had the advantage of exceptional accompaniments by Mrs. Charles Orchard.

Adalbert Huguelet, a pianist who has grown up in the American Conservatory, and who has been heard several times in the concerts of that institution, is a young artist to be reckoned with.

He has appearance, poise, style, technic, and a very distinct and true musical feeling.

His playing of the Brahms Sonata in F Minor was a distinctly scholastic piece of work. Some Debussy was presented with rare intelligence. The glittering "Caprice Espagnol" (Moszkowski) was made still more than usually brilliant at his hands. A charming "Scherzoso" of the late Emil Liebling was delightfully read, and in the "Eroica" of Liszt Mr. Huguelet established his place as an artist.

GEORGE NELSON HOLT

George Nelson Holt, who has resumed his teaching at the Columbia School of Music after a year's absence in France, has a large and unusually interesting class this season.

He also teaches on one day out of each week at Rockford College (Ill.), where he has some very talented pupils.

Mr. Holt, who is president of the Chicago Artists Association, is a man of great personal popularity as well as artistic development, and his pupils delight to honor him.

Ernest Davis, the Chicago tenor, who now lives in New York, where he has been making a splendid success for two or more years, is a pupil of Mr. Holt and speaks enthusiastically of his work.

Mr. Davis is spending two weeks in this vicinity in concerts of the Morgan Extension Series and is to return on November 20 to be soloist with the Apollo Club in a concert at Orchestra Hall.

STUMPF PIANO RECITAL

One of the most enjoyable and interesting pupils' recitals that has been heard recently was given at the home of Mrs. L. C. Stumpf and Miss Aimee Stumpf Sunday evening, October 19.

So many good points were brought out in the teaching of these young pupils that one cannot help wondering why many other teachers do not use the same plan to solve their teaching problems, as well as a means for success.

Eight pupils appeared on the program of Sunday evening, giving, as the program numbers, the material used in their course of study.

Edith Kaufman disclosed good rhythmic sense and much tone color in her group. Virginia Berggren has musical feeling and used good pedaling and fine legato. Dorothy Padden has clean technic and a surety about her playing that comes from much study.

Lucy Shaw's playing is tonally good, her technic is facile, and she has strength to aid in her work. Margaret Heidke uses a good tone and has fine, even scale work. Marion White is musical, and she was sincere in her playing. Dorothy Bornhofen has poise and uses good shading. Virginia Lund gave a group of four with ease and good tone.

Miss Stumpf was a fine musicianly aid in the second piano parts. The program in full was:

Books and Music

By HERBERT J. WRIGHTSON

Violin Mastery, by Frederick H. Martens. Price $2.50 net. (New York: Frederick A. Stokes & Co.)

Interesting to the general reader, engrossing to the musician, and indispensable to the violinist, this work gives lengthy interviews with the world's great artists of the bow. Each of the twenty-five or so included speaks chiefly on some specific subject, but, of course, incidentally on many other matters. For instance, Ysaye's chapter is on "The Tools of Violin Mastery," Auer's on "A Method Without Secrets," Heifetz speaks on "The Danger of Practicing Too Much," Kreisler on "Personality in Art," Sametini on "Harmonics," and so on. The autographed half-tone portraits form quite an art gallery in themselves. In nearly all of the articles is material which must be of great instructive value to students of the instrument, and in some cases the sidelights by one artist on another of the series form a kind of cross reference quite entertaining. There probably never was such a collection of authoritative dicta on the subject of the violin and violin playing as is contained in this volume of about 300 pages, well printed and bound in red cloth, with a portrait of Ysaye on the cover.

Tree Top Tunes for Tiny Tots, by Helen Phillips Eddy. Price $1. (Oliver Ditson Company.)

The dwellers in the tree tops (more or less) with which these tunes are associated are twenty varieties of birds, from the Blue Jay to the Woodpecker—alphabetically. A cheerful paragraph precedes each song, printed in the center of the large, oblong page, and the songs are easy to sing and not difficult to play. Each one is a page in length, said pages being surrounded by decorative borders full of birds. It is a nice book for very young people and those who entertain them, and has a truly gorgeous cover.

Twenty Sacred Two-Part Songs, for women's voices, compiled by Clifford C. Chapman. (Half Dollar Choral Series, Oliver Ditson Company.)

In choirs and places where they sing, either temporarily or permanently, without the aid of men's voices, these anthems will be of service. Some are arrangements of standard compositions (as Gounod's "Praise Ye the Father," Mendelssohn's "O for the Wings of a Dove"), and many are originally written in the two-part form.

When Washington Was a Boy, an opera for young people, by John Mokrejs. Price $1. (Clayton F. Summy Company.)

The celebrated boyhood of the immortal George Washington certainly offers good material for a young people's opera, and it appears to be taken full advantage of in the present work. Mr. Mokrejs' music contains dramatic elements, without becoming unsuitably "high-brow" in quality. Among the directions it is mentioned that the work may be given with a month's training. The stage properties and scenery required are easy to arrange, and of course include the tree and the ax.

Elements of Harmony, by Emil Barth. Price 35 cents. (Clayton F. Summy Company.)

"A complete study of the material used in harmony," not a harmony instruction book. That is, there is a pretty complete catalog of the triads, seventh chords, and augmented sixths, without, however, any explanation of their use in any way. The exercises in the formation of the chords or notes given will be useful elementary training for harmony students, the booklet being intended partly for study in conjunction with a text book explaining the uses of the material listed.

A Time Table, with exercises, by Hannah Smith. Price 20 cents. (Clayton F. Summy Company.)

A full explanation of "Time," commonly so called, but more accurately designated Measure, or Meter, nowadays. The question of Accent is also treated, and some good exercises in placing bar lines in the right places for long unbarred passages complete the pamphlet.

The School Credit Piano Course, second year (36 lessons). In four books. Price $1.50 each net. (Oliver Ditson Company.)

This course is carefully and systematically arranged, each lesson containing a variety of material for the "training of ears, fingers and mind in piano playing and musicianship." This includes not only the regulation piano work, but some theory and history, the latter being sometimes illustrated with views and portraits. A special feature is that the books may be taken apart, untying a silk cord which acts as a loose leaf binder, and the lessons used separately. This is certainly a novel idea and deserving of admiration for its thoroughness and ingenuity.

Public School Class Method, for the piano, by T. P. Giddings and Wilma Gilman.

The difference between private instruction and class instruction is considerable. This book is a good treatise on the latter. It is practical, covers every detail, and is furnished with illustrations as well as accompanied by a Public School Piano Class Reader (No. 1), which contains excellent first and second grade studies.

Six Miniatures, for Piano, by Ivy Herbert. Price 75 cents net. (Boston Music Company.)

Of recent years there have been many little books of short descriptive or sketch-like pieces, mood pictures and the like. The "silent drama" has no doubt created some demand for these, as material from which to select appropriate fragments of accompaniment. The "Six Miniatures" are well entitled to a place among the best of that class. They show good musicianship as well as fancy.

Portraits, a Song Cycle for medium voice, by David Stanley Smith. Price $1.25. (Oliver Ditson Company.)

A set of five songs, affording an excellent medium for the singer. The theme is a rustic one and the final song, that of "The Scarecrow," makes a good climax, in its ruminations as to the harvest of golden grain which it has protected in the growing.

"Alone" is a masterly bit of tone painting, with a Motive of remarkable originality and impressiveness. The composer everywhere shows quite a genius for conveying the spirit of the text in the music; note, for instance, the beautiful melodic turns in the fourth number, "Rachel."
